2013 PLAYER OUTLOOKS

QUARTERBACKS

Derek Anderson, Panthers

Derek Anderson is expected to be on the move this offseason after spending two seasons as Cam Newton's backup in Carolina. He should remain a backup and not a consideration for Fantasy owners in 2013.

Bye 4

Matt Barkley, Eagles

The Eagles made a surprise move when they drafted Southern California quarterback Matt Barkley in the fourth round of the NFL Draft. Barkley slipped in the draft, but now he has a chance to compete for the starting job in Philadelphia. He will likely open training camp behind Michael Vick and Nick Foles, but new coach Chip Kelly could give Barkley a chance to win the job. The most likely scenario is Barkley sits out his rookie year to learn, and he comes back in 2014 ready to start for the Eagles. We don't recommend drafting Barkley in most standard leagues, but he is worth a late-round pick in rookie only formats.

Bye 12

Charlie Batch, Free Agent

Charlie Batch is a free agent after backing up Ben Roethlisberger and even starting two games in his place. At best he'll compete to be a backup again in training camp this summer. At worst, he'll retire. He's not worth considering in drafts.

Bye 5

McLeod Bethel-Thompson, Vikings

Are you really reading an outlook for McLeod Bethel-Thompson? Are you playing Scrabble instead of Fantasy Football? The guy will fight to be the Vikings' No. 3/emergency quarterback this season. No one should consider adding him to Fantasy rosters.

Bye 5

Matt Blanchard, Bears

Matt Blanchard will battle for a roster spot with the Bears. He might be able to wind up as the No. 3 quarterback for the team, but he's not expected to play. Keep him off of rosters.

Bye 8

Sam Bradford, Rams

For the first time in his career, Sam Bradford will finally have some semblance of continuity. That's because he'll have the same offensive coordinator and same offensive scheme for the first time under Brian Schottenheimer. Bradford went from Pat Shurmur and a West Coast scheme in 2010, to Josh McDaniels and more of a deep-passing approach in 2011, to Schottenheimer and something in-between in 2012. The good news is Bradford is coming off a career year last season with 3,702 yards, 21 touchdowns and 13 interceptions and 37 carries for 127 yards and one touchdown. The bad news is that despite those stats he was still just the No. 18 Fantasy quarterback in a standard league, and he managed just five games with at least 18 Fantasy points. This offseason, the Rams revamped their offense. Steven Jackson, Danny Amendola and Brandon Gibson are gone as free agents, and the Rams replaced them with free agent tight end Jared Cook and rookies Tavon Austin, Stedman Bailey and Zac Stacy. We'll find out if it was an upgrade or not, but Bradford is now the focal point on offense. He should be considered a No. 2 Fantasy quarterback with upside. He's not worth drafting in most leagues, but Bradford could emerge as a bye-week replacement if things go his way.

Bye 11

Tom Brady, Patriots

Tom Brady enters this season trying to remain among the elite quarterbacks. We expect that to happen. In 2012, Brady was a Top 3 Fantasy quarterback for the third year in a row. He had more than 4,800 passing yards for the second year in a row, more than 37 total touchdowns for the third year in a row and for the second time in his past three years he had fewer than 10 interceptions. At a time when running quarterbacks are all the rage, Brady continues to dominate. His receiving corps is in flux with Aaron Hernandez, Wes Welker, Danny Woodhead and Brandon Lloyd gone, and Danny Amendola, Aaron Dobson, Josh Boyce, Michael Jenkins and Donald Jones now in. He also has standout tight end Rob Gronkowski coming off back surgery. But Brady should still be able to post quality stats. He's a volume passer -- he's been Top 5 in pass attempts in three of the past four seasons -- especially if Gronkowski is ready for Week 1. He remains a No. 1 Fantasy quarterback in all leagues, and we expect him to be drafted beginning in Round 5 in most standard formats.

QUARTERBACKS (CONT.)

Drew Brees, Saints

Just how great is Drew Brees for Fantasy? He's posted 20-plus Fantasy points in 25 of his last 32 games, more than anyone else. He's missed one game since arriving in New Orleans and has attempted more than 650 passes in each of his past three seasons. When you shop for a Fantasy quarterback, Brees gives you everything you could possibly want in terms of production and consistency, which is why he's expected to be the top quarterback taken in drafts this summer. But because of the deluge of quarterbacks available, he figures to slip into Round 2 of most drafts. Don't hesitate to take him then knowing just how effective he should be. The plus side is in drafting Brees you won't need to take a backup, freeing up another roster spot for someone else.

Jason Campbell, Browns

Jason Campbell signed with the Browns this season, where he'll either end up as a backup behind Brandon Weeden or land a starting job depending on what you believe to read. Either way, Campbell won't be counted on to help much in Fantasy. Keep him off of Fantasy rosters.

David Carr, Giants

David Carr will compete with rookie Ryan Nassib to be the No. 2 quarterback for the Giants in 2013 behind Eli Manning. In 2012, Carr was just 2 of 3 passing for 19 yards. Unless Manning gets hurt, ignore Carr in all leagues, including on Draft Day, even if beats out Nassib for the No. 2 job.

Matt Cassel, Vikings

Matt Cassel was once considered the franchise quarterback for the Chiefs. Now, he's the backup to Christian Ponder in Minnesota. The new regime in Kansas City under coach Andy Reid brought in Alex Smith to be the starter for the Chiefs, and Cassel was let go. Cassel was never a great Fantasy option, but he had his moments as a quality reserve. But unless he lands a starting job with the Vikings over Ponder then his value will be minimal. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Jimmy Clausen, Panthers

Jimmy Clausen is expected to battle in camp for the right to back up Cam Newton in 2013. We better not see Clausen play regularly because it will mean that something happened to Newton! Keep Clausen, who is entering a contract year, off of Fantasy rosters.

Kellen Clemens, Rams

Kellen Clemens is back with the Rams as the No. 2 quarterback behind Sam Bradford. Unless Bradford goes down, Clemens has minimal Fantasy value in the majority of leagues. Ignore him on Draft Day.

B.J. Coleman, Packers

B.J. Coleman will compete to back up Aaron Rodgers in training camp this summer. Unless something happens to Rodgers, Coleman won't have any Fantasy impact. Keep him off of rosters.

Bye 7

Aaron Corp, Bills

The Bills signed Aaron Corp for depth at quarterback, but he's not expected to be a factor if he makes the final roster. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Kirk Cousins, Redskins

Kirk Cousins will be the No. 2 quarterback for the Redskins this year. He would only have increased Fantasy value if Robert Griffin III has a setback in his recovery from knee surgery. Otherwise, if Griffin is healthy to start the season, you should ignore Cousins in the majority of leagues on Draft Day.

Jay Cutler, Bears

It might be put-up-or-shut-up time for Jay Cutler with the Bears. Through four years with the Bears Cutler has led the team to one playoff win and has yet to post a 4,000-yard campaign. He's endured three different playcallers and will have his fourth in Marc Trestman this season. Many quarterbacks swear by Trestman's knowledge and play-calling abilities and there's little doubt he will lean on Cutler in the Bears' offense this season. This should afford Cutler the chance to put up numbers unlike previous years so long as he stays healthy. That's going to be tricky as Chicago's offensive line needs an Oprah-like makeover. If that happens and the Bears follow through on their plan to give him at least one more weapon, then Cutler might have the chance to be helpful in Fantasy. He'll want to do it - he's entering a contract year and could feasibly pull a Joe Flacco if he has a solid year and pushes the Bears to great heights. It's enough to look at Cutler as a good backup Fantasy option with a late-round pick, potentially a phenomenal value.

Andy Dalton, Bengals

For a guy who's led his team to two consecutive playoff appearances and has one of the best receivers in football to throw to, Andy Dalton doesn't get much love from Fantasy owners. That's not to say he never gave a reason to be loved: He had 25-plus points in four of his first six games in 2012 and then went on a similar streak over three games from Week 10 to Week 12. Aside from those flashes, Dalton's numbers were pretty gross as he had seven games with at least two passing touchdowns but finished with four passing touchdowns in six games. Turnovers were also an issue as he had just five games without an interception over 17 matchups. The key for him last season was finding a reliable second receiver to go to opposite A.J. Green -- when he had one, particularly in Mohamed Sanu, his numbers were Brees-esque. Without one, well, he was more like himself. The Bengals will get Sanu back after he suffered a foot injury and also added rookie tight end Tyler Eifert, so those additions could help Dalton become a more consistent producer. There's serious potential for Dalton but he's not going to get picked any higher than as a reserve with a late-round choice in standard drafts.

Bye 12

Bye 5

Bye 8

QUARTERBACKS (CONT.)

Chase Daniel, Chiefs

Chase Daniel signed with the Chiefs and is expected to back up Alex Smith. Until something happens that opens the door for Daniel to play, Fantasy owners can pass on him.

Bye 10

B.J. Daniels, 49ers

The 49ers drafted quarterback B.J. Daniels in the seventh round of the NFL Draft out of South Florida. He will compete for a roster spot as a reserve quarterback. Even if he makes the final roster he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 9

Austin Davis, Rams

Austin Davis will compete for a roster spot this year as a backup quarterback for the Rams. Even if he makes the final roster, he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 11

Dominique Davis, Falcons

Dominique Davis is expected to compete for the backup job behind starter Matt Ryan in Atlanta this summer. Unless he's pressed into action, don't consider drafting him.

Bye 6

Pat Devlin, Dolphins

Pat Devlin will compete for a roster spot with the Dolphins in 2013, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve quarterback. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 6

Trent Edwards, Eagles

Trent Edwards is looking for a job after the Eagles released him this offseason. Keep an eye on where he ends up, but he would be a backup quarterback at best and has minimal Fantasy value in the majority of leagues.

Bye 12

Ryan Fitzpatrick, Bills

Ryan Fitzpatrick went from a starter with the Bills to a backup in Tennessee behind Jake Locker after he was released this offseason. He will have to wait his turn for a starting job depending on if Locker gets hurt or falters. Fitzpatrick had a productive year in 2012. He completed 60.6 percent of his passes for 3,400 yards with 24 touchdowns and 16 interceptions, and he also added a rushing touchdown on 48 carries for 197 yards with six fumbles. The problem is in today's NFL those numbers are pedestrian at best, and the turnovers are problematic (this is two years in a row with at least 20). We hope he can turn his career around and get a starting shot again down the road, but his Fantasy value is minimal. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Bye 12

Joe Flacco, Ravens

Ravens quarterback Joe Flacco got everything he wanted last season. A Super Bowl victory, a new contract and respect from around the NFL that he's an elite passer. Now all he has to do is build off that success, but it won't be easy without two of his top targets. Anquan Boldin was traded to San Francisco, and Dennis Pitta (hip) was lost for the year in training camp. He still has Torrey Smith, Ray Rice and Jacoby Jones, but Flacco isn't going to excite Fantasy owners in the majority of leagues. He should be considered a No. 2 quarterback in most formats, and he's not worth drafting until the later rounds, if he's taken at all. Don't look at his postseason performance and consider him a No. 1 Fantasy option because it's not likely to happen with Boldin and Pitta gone.

Bye 8

Matt Flynn, Seahawks

Last year, Matt Flynn was expected to be the starting quarterback for the Seahawks, but he lost the job to Russell Wilson. This year, Flynn is expected to be the starter for the Raiders after he was traded to Oakland in March, but will he lose the job again, this time to Terrelle Pryor or rookie Tyler Wilson? The Raiders fully expect to give Flynn the chance to start, but he has to prove he's ready for the job. In 2012, he sat on the bench behind Wilson and barely played, going 5 of 9 passing for 68 yards. If he does start for Oakland this year then he should be considered a low-end No. 2 Fantasy quarterback - he's still not worth drafting in the majority of leagues. And if he loses the job to Pryor or Wilson then obviously he has no value in most formats.

Bye 12

Nick Foles, Eagles

Eagles quarterback Nick Foles could win the starting job with a strong training camp and preseason performance. He is competing with Michael Vick for the job, and new coach Chip Kelly has said there's an open battle to be the starter. Foles got a chance to start six games as a rookie last year. He had 1,699 passing yards, six touchdowns and five interceptions and 42 rushing yards and a touchdown in 2012. If he beats out Vick then Foles would be a No. 2 Fantasy quarterback, and he should not be drafted in most leagues. Keep an eye on what develops with Foles, but even if he starts the Eagles are going to be run heavy and without standout receiver Jeremy Maclin (ACL). Foles has minimal upside. He's not worth drafting in the majority of leagues unless he's the starter. Even then he would be a low-end No. 2 option in most formats.

QUARTERBACKS (CONT.)

Josh Freeman, Buccaneers

Josh Freeman finished six points shy of being among the Top 12 Fantasy quarterbacks last season. Depending which part of his year you remember seeing, this will either surprise you or disgust you. His first four games were weak before coming out of the bye with reckless abandon, stringing together six straight games with at least two touchdowns and at least 20 Fantasy points. Then he hit a wall in Week 12 and had a couple of decent games mixed in with some stinkers (who could forget his back-to-back four interception games in Weeks 15 and 16?). We do know the Bucs will stick with Freeman heading into 2012 and we know he'll play behind an offensive line that was decimated by injuries by the end of the year along with a very good receiving corps that helped him put up career-highs in yardage (4,065) and touchdowns (27). No one should reach for Freeman in drafts but targeting him late in drafts as a No. 2 quarterback could pay off dividends as he enters a contract year and is basically in the exact same situation Joe Flacco was in last season. Maybe it works out for Freeman, too.

Blaine Gabbert, Jaguars

Blaine Gabbert looks like he's got the early lead in the Jaguars' quarterback battle, but it's early. A year ago, he appeared to have moved past a terrible rookie year, connecting for three scores and completing 61 percent of his preseason passes without an interception. Then the regular season started and Gabbert struggled over nine games, completing 58.3 percent of his passes for an average of 5.98 yards per attempt with nine touchdowns and six interceptions. His season ended with forearm and shoulder injuries and now a new coaching staff will decide if he or Chad Henne will pilot the offense. However, there's no Fantasy appeal for either Jacksonville quarterback outside of leagues that start multiple signal-callers.

David Garrard, Jets

David Garrard was cut by the Dolphins prior to the 2012 season after he suffered a knee injury in training camp. Prior to getting hurt, Garrard was in line to start for the Dolphins as a stopgap option until Ryan Tannehill was ready. Garrard was signed by the Jets this offseason, and he will compete for the starting job but will most likely be a backup if he makes the final roster. If he does play this season he would have minimal Fantasy value and should not be drafted in most leagues.

Bye 5

Mike Glennon, Buccaneers

The Tampa Bay Buccaneers selected North Carolina State quarterback Mike Glennon in the third round of the NFL draft. Glennon completed over 58 percent of his passes for 4,031 yards, 31 touchdowns and 17 interceptions for the Wolfpack as a senior. Bucs coach Greg Schiano has said he'd like to increase competition at every position with the Bucs, including quarterback, where Josh Freeman is entering the final year of the contract he signed as a first-round pick in 2009. Glennon isn't expected to push Freeman much, though. He has a fantastic arm but is an immobile, skinny passer who does not do so well with the pressure on him. The bottom line is that he won't play much this year and could be stuck on the bench for a while if Freeman puts together a strong 2013. He's not worth taking in seasonal leagues and is a late-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a middle-round choice in rookie-only drafts.

Bye 5

Bruce Gradkowski, Steelers

Bruce Gradkowski landed as a backup with the Steelers this offseason after filling the same role with the Bengals in 2012. Even if something were to happen to Ben Roethlisberger, Gradkowski wouldn't be a promising Fantasy option. Feel free to leave the Pittsburgh native on your league's waivers.

Bye 5

Robert Griffin III, Redskins

Robert Griffin III is starting to look better as the preseason goes on as he appears on track to be ready for Week 1 against the Eagles. He had surgery to repair a torn ACL, MCL and meniscus in January and as a result is on a limited workout schedule through the month of August. He's not expected to participate in any preseason games but he's been practicing on a regular basis. There's no denying how awesome Griffin was last season, tallying 344 Fantasy points (seventh best among QBs) and averaging 22.9 Fantasy points per week. There is no indication the Redskins will alter their playbook and make RG3 a statuesque pocket passer, meaning it's very possible he remains as productive as he was in 2012. But he also could get hurt again, something Fantasy owners have to consider given what happened to him as a rookie. Your best bet is to consider him a solid No. 1 Fantasy quarterback worth a pick starting in Round 6. If you get him, aim to back him up with a capable passer a few rounds later. That's pretty much all the insurance you'll need to feel safe about owning Griffin in Fantasy play.

Bye 5

Rex Grossman, Redskins

Rex Grossman returned to the Redskins as a free agent this offseason, but he's not expected to see much action. He will likely be No. 3 on the depth chart behind Robert Griffin III and Kirk Cousins, so even if Griffin is out to start the year with his knee injury, we wouldn't expect Grossman to see much playing time. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

QUARTERBACKS (CONT.)

Caleb Hanie, Ravens

Caleb Hanie spent 2012 as a backup quarterback to Peyton Manning in Denver, but he did not take a snap. He could be facing the same fate this year after ending up in Baltimore. Hanie will now play behind Joe Flacco, but it's unlikely he will see much action. Ignore Hanie in all leagues.

Bye 8

Chandler Harnish, Colts

Chandler Harnish hopes to retain his role as the No. 3/emergency quarterback behind Andrew Luck and Matt Hasselbeck. He's not expected to put up many Fantasy stats in 2013 so keep him off rosters.

Bye 8

Graham Harrell, Packers

Graham Harrell will compete to back up Aaron Rodgers in training camp this summer. Unless something happens to Rodgers (and we're hoping we didn't just jinx him), Harrell won't have any Fantasy impact. Keep him off of rosters.

Bye 4

Matt Hasselbeck, Colts

Veteran Matt Hasselbeck moves within the AFC South from the Titans to the Colts where he'll back up Andrew Luck in 2013. Hasselbeck only saw playing time last season because the starter in front of him missed playing time. That's the only way he'll see any action this year, too. So unless Andrew Luck gets hurt or wins the Powerball or something, Fantasy owners won't have to sweat Hasselbeck. Leave him off rosters.

Bye 8

Chad Henne, Jaguars

Chad Henne earned the right to compete for the starting job with the Jaguars after totaling 11 touchdowns and averaging 267 passing yards per outing in the Jags' final seven games last season. That didn't lead to many wins, but at least he showed he's capable of being a decent passer. Henne will battle Blaine Gabbert for the top job in training camp and while the Jaguars' receiving corps isn't half bad, there's no Fantasy appeal for either Jacksonville quarterback outside of leagues that start multiple signal-callers.

Bye 9

Shaun Hill, Lions

Shaun Hill only got in for one game with the Lions last year, connecting on a touchdown to Calvin Johnson and a Hail Mary to Titus Young. Hill should stick with the Lions as a backup to Stafford. The only owners who should consider Hill are those in deeper two-QB leagues who take Stafford with an early-round pick.

Bye 9

Brian Hoyer, Free Agent

Brian Hoyer appeared in the final two games for the Cardinals in 2012 with one start. He finished the year 30 of 53 passing for 330 yards, one touchdown and two interceptions. He signed with Cleveland in the spring. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Tarvaris Jackson, Bills

Tarvaris Jackson was re-signed by the Bills this offseason, and at the time, new coach Doug Marrone said there would be an open competition for the starting job. That was before the Bills signed Kevin Kolb and drafted rookie E.J. Manuel in the first round, which likely hinders Jackson from being the starter in Week 1. It would be interesting to see Jackson start since he was with the Bills in 2012 but did not take a snap. This was after starting 14 games for the Seahawks in 2011 and passing for 3,091 yards, 14 touchdowns and 13 interceptions. Kolb or Manuel will likely open the season as the starter, so Jackson should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Bye 12

Landry Jones, Steelers

The Steelers selected Oklahoma quarterback Landry Jones in the NFL draft. Jones is the most intriguing player on the list because of his position. He's got a good arm and comes from a quick-hitting Oklahoma offense. There's concern that he's still raw as a downfield passer because of all the check-downs he threw in college so he really needs time to learn to read coverage. He's worth a late-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and rookie-only drafts.

Bye 5

Colin Kaepernick, 49ers

Colin Kaepernick lost his No. 1 receiver in Michael Crabtree (Achilles) before the season started, but that doesn't mean his Fantasy value is sunk. Kaepernick should still play at a high level, and hopefully what he did last year in a small sample size will carry over to a big performance. He had five games with at least 18 Fantasy points in seven starts in the regular season, and he carried the 49ers to the Super Bowl with two standout playoff games. If you project Kaepernick's regular-season stats over a full 16-game season he would have finished with 4,146 passing yards, 23 touchdowns and seven interceptions and 948 rushing yards and 11 touchdowns. That's pretty awesome. He takes a hit with Crabtree out, but Kaepernick has the look of a No. 1 Fantasy quarterback, and we like him with a pick beginning in Round 6 in the majority of leagues. Since he's unproven, you'll still want to pair him with a quality backup option later (think anyone from Eli Manning to Jay Cutler), but Kaepernick should still be able to hold his own with a revamped receiving corps led by Vernon Davis and Anquan Boldin. Remember, there aren't many quarterbacks who can run like Kaepernick, and that rushing prowess makes him a unique Fantasy commodity.

Bye 9

Mike Kafka, Jaguars

Mike Kafka will compete for a roster spot with the Jaguars in 2013 after he was claimed off waivers from the Patriots, who cut him to sign Tim Tebow. Kafka would have minimal Fantasy value even if he makes the team. The Jaguars don't have a franchise quarterback with Blaine Gabbert and Chad Henne expected to battle for the starting spot, but Kafka is still a longshot to start for Jacksonville this year. Ignore Kafka in all leagues.

QUARTERBACKS (CONT.)

Case Keenum, Texans

Case Keenum will battle for a roster spot in training camp with the Texans. He's a long way from playing regularly so Fantasy owners should ignore him on Draft Day.

Bye 8

G.J. Kinne, Eagles

G.J. Kinne will try to earn a roster spot with the Eagles this season, but he has minimal Fantasy value even if he makes the final team as a backup quarterback. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 12

Kevin Kolb, Bills

Kevin Kolb signed with Buffalo this offseason where he was expected to be the starter, but the Bills surprised many by drafting E.J. Manuel in the first round. Now, Kolb will compete for the job, but even if he wins he might have a short leash because Manuel is the quarterback of the future in Buffalo. Kolb, the starter in Arizona last year, was actually making some progress in 2012 before getting hurt. Kolb, who suffered a rib injury in Week 6 and was lost for the year, had at least 17 Fantasy points in three of five starts in 2012. His brief performance ended with 1,169 yards, eight touchdowns and three interceptions and 103 rushing yards and one touchdown and two fumbles. If Kolb does start he has at least one solid receiver in Steve Johnson and a strong running game behind him with C.J. Spiller and Fred Jackson but little else in Buffalo. We don't have high expectations for Kolb, and he's not worth drafting in the majority of leagues. At best, let him start off the season playing well and then consider him a potential bye-week replacement.

Bye 12

Byron Leftwich, Free Agent

Byron Leftwich is a free agent after backing up Ben Roethlisberger and even starting a game in his place. At best he'll compete to be a backup again in training camp this summer. The former first-round pick won't be worth considering in drafts.

Matt Leinart, Free Agent

Matt Leinart is a free agent this offseason, and he will look to sign with a team as a backup quarterback. He appeared in two games for the Raiders in 2012 and was 16 of 33 passing for 115 yards and one interception. He should not be drafted in any leagues.

Ryan Lindley, Cardinals

Ryan Lindley will compete for a roster spot with the Cardinals this season as a backup quarterback. Even if he makes the final roster he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in the majority of leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 9

Jake Locker, Titans

Jake Locker's career hasn't gotten off to a great start, which is why Fantasy owners should be nervous to draft him even though he's the Titans starter. Last year Locker had all of one game with 20-plus Fantasy points (Peyton Manning and Tom Brady each had 12) and suffered shoulder injuries that raised a red flag for his future. The Titans did a lot this offseason to improve their offensive line and run game, telling signs that Locker won't throw a ton (he had four games with 35-plus pass attempts last year anyway). He does have a receiving corps that looks good on paper and has the legs to move around and out of the pocket, but a lack of consistency as a passer and as a stat producer limit him to late-round material on Draft Day.

Bye 8

Andrew Luck, Colts

Andrew Luck began paying dividends right away for the Colts, though his Fantasy totals weren't quite as impressive. Luck finished as a Top-12 Fantasy quarterback, but had just six games with 20-plus Fantasy points (standard-scoring leagues). That's half as many as Tom Brady and Peyton Manning. Luck's year really wasn't all that great. He threw for 4,374 yards and 23 touchdowns, running for another five touchdowns and 255 yards. That seems fine for a typical rookie but not for someone who had as much clout as Luck. Now consider that he completed just 54.1 percent of his passes and turned the ball over 23 times (18 interceptions, five fumbles) and it's clear he wasn't the perfect quarterback you might have thought. But that was then and this is now - the Colts have beefed up their offensive line and expect Luck to have more time to throw. His coaches expect the game to slow down for him in his second season, plus a change in coordinators brings the scheme he used in college into the pros. Finally, he's got a heck of an arm. Luck still strikes us as a Top-12 quarterback and one that brings some decent value with a sixth-round pick.

Bye 8

Ryan Mallett, Patriots

Ryan Mallett will remain the No. 2 quarterback in New England behind Tom Brady. Mallett isn't expected to see the field much as long as Brady is healthy. Don't draft Mallett in the majority of standard leagues, but he is worth drafting in deep dynasty/keeper leagues in case he eventually inherits the starting job from Brady down the road or gets traded to become a starter elsewhere.

QUARTERBACKS (CONT.)

Eli Manning, Giants

Eli Manning should be considered one of the leading bounce-back candidates this year. He struggled in 2012, which was a surprise, but he didn't have a healthy Hakeem Nicks and also was without former No. 3 receiver Mario Manningham, who left as a free agent for San Francisco. Manning's final stats in 2012 were respectable but misleading. He finished with 3,948 yards, 26 touchdowns and 15 interceptions, which gave him 276 Fantasy points in a standard league. But Manning needed 208 passing yards and five touchdowns -- 38 Fantasy points -- in a meaningless Week 17 game against the Eagles to save his production. He was brutal for most of the season (he had four games with five Fantasy points or fewer), and we predict a rebound year is in order. Getting Nicks back at 100 percent will help, and the Giants need to hope Rueben Randle can become a viable third receiver all season. The Giants also replaced the departed Martellus Bennett with Brandon Myers from Oakland. Before last year, Manning had consecutive seasons of at least 4,000 passing yards and 30 total touchdowns. It won't take him much to get back to that level, and he actually presents great value since he'll fall to a mid- to late-round pick in most leagues. We love getting Manning as a low-end starter or high-end backup in 2013.

Bye 9

Peyton Manning, Broncos

Peyton Manning proved everyone wrong in his comeback effort in 2012 after missing a season following neck surgery. And now he has the chance to build on that performance, especially with the addition of receiver Wes Welker. That could make Manning a candidate to be the No. 1 Fantasy quarterback this year because he was impressive in his first year with the Broncos. Manning completed 68.6 percent of his passes for 4,659 yards, 37 touchdowns and 11 interceptions. It was the 12th time he passed for 4,000-plus yards (third time with 4,500 yards) and the seventh time he's thrown for 30-plus touchdowns. Manning will be 37 when the season starts, but he continues to play at a high level and defied all skeptics with his performance last year. He has arguably the best receiving corps in the NFL with Demaryius Thomas, Eric Decker and now Welker to go with a solid running game behind a stout offensive line. We consider Manning a Top-5 Fantasy quarterback on Draft Day, and he's worth drafting with a pick toward the end of Round 2 or beginning of Round 3 in all formats.

Bye 9

E.J. Manuel, Bills

The Bills surprised everyone at the NFL Draft when they selected Florida State quarterback E.J. Manuel in the first round at No. 16 overall. Manuel, who passed for 3,397 yards and 23 touchdowns with 10 interceptions as a senior with the Seminoles, is expected to compete with Kevin Kolb for the starting job in Buffalo this season. We expect Manuel to win the job, but keep an eye on what develops in training camp. If Manuel does start he would have some intriguing Fantasy value based on his ability to run and throw. We wouldn't draft Manuel in the majority of standard leagues, but he is worth a late-round pick in two-quarterback formats. In rookie-only leagues plan on drafting Manuel with a first-round pick, and he's worth a late-round selection in dynasty leagues.

Bye 12

Luke McCown, Saints

Luke McCown signed a one-year deal with the Saints to back up Drew Brees. Unless he's pressed into action, don't consider drafting him.

Bye 7

Colt McCoy, 49ers

Colt McCoy was traded to San Francisco on April Fool's Day. There, he'll back up Colin Kaepernick. McCoy got used to the backup role last year in Cleveland where he only threw 17 passes. There's no reason to keep reading -- McCoy isn't worth a Fantasy roster spot.

Bye 9

Greg McElroy, Jets

Greg McElroy is expected to be the No. 3 quarterback for the Jets this year. He would only see significant playing time if the quarterbacks ahead of him get injured, and he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 10

Stephen McGee, Texans

Stephen McGee will battle for a roster spot in training camp with the Texans. He's a long way from playing regularly so Fantasy owners should ignore him on Draft Day.

Bye 8

Kellen Moore, Lions

Kellen Moore will enter training camp hoping to just stay on the Lions roster after serving as the No. 3/emergency QB last year. Keep Moore out of your draft plans.

Bye 9

Matt Moore, Dolphins

Matt Moore will return to the Dolphins as the No. 2 quarterback behind Ryan Tannehill. He spent the past two seasons with Miami, where he was the starter in 2011 and the backup to Tannehill in 2012. As a starter in 2011, he took over for the injured Chad Henne in Week 6 and had at least 18 Fantasy points in five games. He barely played in 2012 (11 of 19 passing for 131 yards and one touchdown in two games), and that will likely be the case again this year barring a Tannehill injury. Moore should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Bye 6

Ryan Nassib, Giants

The Giants made a surprise move to draft Syracuse quarterback Ryan Nassib in the fourth round of the NFL Draft. Eli Manning is the quarterback of the present and the near future, and Nassib will just sit on the bench since Manning never gets hurt. Nassib will be No. 2 on the depth chart at best if he can beat out David Carr for the backup job, but don't expect Nassib to play any time soon. Ignore him in all seasonal leagues, and he's only worth a late-round pick in rookie-only formats.

QUARTERBACKS (CONT.)

Cam Newton, Panthers

Fantasy owners are hoping a strong finish to 2012 will put Cam Newton in prime position to dominate in 2013. After a lousy start last season Newton had multiple touchdowns in seven of his final nine contests, boosting his Fantasy production from 17.0 Fantasy points per game to 25.3 points per game. A few tweaks in offensive philosophy and a reliance on the short-area passing game (and a good schedule) helped turn things around for Newton, but more tweaks are in store this offseason after the team lost offensive coordinator Rob Chudzinski to Cleveland's head coaching job. Mike Shula will take over the Panthers' offense, which Newton is happy with, but his track record as an offensive coordinator and head coach is not very good. The plan in Carolina is to stick with what worked late in 2012. Luckily, Newton is a freak of nature and stands to continue putting up huge numbers even though they did little this off season to improve the offense. Factor in Newton's goal-line prowess and there's not necessarily a lot to fear with Newton so long as he's taken with a pick after elite quarterbacks like Drew Brees, Aaron Rodgers and Peyton Manning are taken. That could happen after the 30th overall pick.

Bye 4

Carson Palmer, Cardinals

Carson Palmer went from the starting quarterback for the Raiders the past two seasons to the starter for the Cardinals this year. It's a nice upgrade for the 33-year-old passer, who is entering the twilight of his career. Palmer actually was a quality Fantasy quarterback in 2012. In 14 full games he had at least 18 Fantasy points 10 times. His biggest issue was turnovers since he had at least one interception in 11 games, including nine games in a row. But his final stats were respectable at 4,018 passing yards, 22 touchdowns and 14 interceptions and 18 carries for 36 yards and one touchdown. The reason the move to the Cardinals is an upgrade is Palmer now gets to throw to Larry Fitzgerald, who is the best receiver he's ever had. He also gets a coach in Bruce Arians who likes a downfield attack, and Palmer has other quality weapons in Michael Floyd, Andre Roberts and Rob Housler. The Cardinals need to upgrade their offensive line to keep Palmer off his back - they allowed the most sacks in the NFL last year at 58 - but Palmer enters the season as a No. 2 Fantasy quarterback with upside. He's worth a late-round pick in deeper leagues.

Bye 9

Dan Orlovsky, Buccaneers

Dan Orlovsky was re-signed by the Bucs in April after he was released in what was likely a salary cap move. Orlovsky will battle for the backup job behind Josh Freeman. Since that's the case, Orlovsky can't be considered a worthwhile Fantasy option.

Bye 5

Jordan Palmer, Jaguars

Jordan Palmer is looking for work after spending last season in part with the Jaguars. He's been a career backup in the NFL, so if he does sign anywhere then he'll probably take a seat in the stands and watch his brother Carson play. He shouldn't be a consideration on Draft Day.

Bye 9

Kyle Orton, Cowboys

Kyle Orton is the No. 2 quarterback for the Cowboys and has minimal Fantasy value. He barely played in 2012 -- 9 of 10 for 89 yards and a touchdown -- as the backup to Tony Romo, and he won't play much this year as long as Romo remains healthy. Ignore Orton in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 11

Christian Ponder, Vikings

Christian Ponder is an unlikely breakout candidate after the Vikings traded star receiver Percy Harvin in mid-March. His 2012 statistics were fair-to-middling until Harvin got hurt, and then his stats sunk until he came up big for the Vikings in a three-touchdown performance in Week 17. Effectively playing with Harvin for the first eight games of the year, Ponder totaled 1,743 yards on 171 of 262 passing (65.2 percent) for 10 touchdowns and seven interceptions. Without Harvin, Ponder had 1,192 yards on 129 of 221 passing (58.3 percent) with eight touchdowns and five interceptions. It's clear Ponder needs help around him in order to be a terrific Fantasy quarterback and right now he just doesn't have enough. That could change, but at this point Fantasy owners know Ponder for being weak-armed and second fiddle to Adrian Peterson. While true, he still should have plenty of opportunities to put up some numbers this season -- just not to the point where you'll feel comfortable starting him. At best, Ponder is a late-round pick and at worst he's someone you ignore on Draft Day and pick up as a replacement off waivers during the season.

Bye 5

Brock Osweiler, Broncos

Brock Osweiler might be the quarterback of the future in Denver, but his present is on the bench behind Peyton Manning. Osweiler is expected to be the No. 2 quarterback for the Broncos behind Manning, and he has minimal Fantasy value as long as Manning is healthy. Ignore Osweiler in standard leagues on Draft Day, but he is worth a late-round pick in dynasty leagues since Manning, 37, isn't going to play forever.

Bye 9

Curtis Painter, Giants

Curtis Painter will compete for a roster spot for the Giants this season as a reserve quarterback. Even if he makes the final roster he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all formats on Draft Day.

Bye 9

Josh Portis, Seahawks

The Seahawks have brought back Josh Portis this year after he was cut from the practice squad in November. He will compete for a roster spot but has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

QUARTERBACKS (CONT.)

Terrelle Pryor, Raiders

Terrelle Pryor will be given the chance to compete for the starting quarterback job this season, but he's a longshot to win the position battle. The Raiders added Matt Flynn and rookie Tyler Wilson this offseason, and both might be ahead of Pryor on the depth chart. He got the chance to start one game for the Raiders in 2012, and he turned some heads in a Week 17 loss at San Diego. In that game against the Chargers, Pryor was 13 of 28 passing for 150 yards, two touchdowns and one interception, and he added 49 rushing yards and a touchdown. He is a sneaky pick with a late-round selection in deep leagues if he wins the job in training camp, and if Pryor does take over this season he could make an impact. But just see what develops in training camp since Pryor has to outplay Flynn and Wilson before winning the job.

Brady Quinn, Seahawks

Brady Quinn signed in Seattle where he will be the backup to Russell Wilson. Quinn got the chance to start the final six games last year in Kansas City for the ineffective Matt Cassel, but he closed the season with two touchdowns and five interceptions over that span and just one game over 200 passing yards. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Sean Renfree, Falcons

The Falcons selected quarterback Sean Renfree from Duke in the NFL draft. Renfree has a very nice arm but has struggled with touch and velocity and tore his pectoral muscle in his last college game. He faces an uphill battle for playing time. He's not worth considering in Fantasy play just yet.

Philip Rivers, Chargers

Philip Rivers was once thought of as an upper-echelon Fantasy quarterback, but the last two years have plenty of owners questioning whether he should even be drafted at all. Rivers is coming off one of the worst seasons of his career in 2012 with 3,606 passing yards, 26 touchdowns and 15 interceptions. The passing yards and touchdowns were his lowest total since 2007, and he's trending in the wrong direction. He had just eight games with more than 18 Fantasy points and only topped 20 points four times. His offensive line is in a rebuilding mode, and his receiving corps is far from spectacular, especially with Danario Alexanders (ACL) out for the year. Rivers has a lot to prove, and not many Fantasy owners are counting on him. He should be considered a No. 2 quarterback on Draft Day, and he should only be selected with a late-round pick. If he rebounds, you have a steal, but don't overvalue him based on name recognition.

Bye 7

Aaron Rodgers, Packers

Last year, Packers quarterback Aaron Rodgers was the ultimate "safe" pick to take in Round 1. This year he's still that guy, but you should be able to find him in Round 2 or later. His production took a small dip in 2012 -- most notably his yards per pass attempt dropped by about a yard and a half -- but he still finished as the second-best quarterback in Fantasy Football and had an incredible eight games with at least 30 Fantasy points. No one had more, but he also had some weak outings, recording five games with 16 or fewer points (this is in standard-scoring leagues). That's to be expected, but Rodgers -- a consensus must-start quarterback -- had just nine games with 20 or more points, fifth-best among all passers. For an elite talent a little more might be expected. Drew Brees was more consistent and produced more Fantasy points last year -- he's someone worth considering over Rodgers. And Rodgers has some issues with his offensive line (left tackle Bryan Bulaga is out for the year) and at receiver (Greg Jennings is gone and Jordy Nelson had knee surgery in August). Still, Rodgers should thrive, especially once Nelson returns, and he remains a Top 3 quarterback in all leagues. Look for him to be drafted in Round 2 at the earliest, and if he falls to Round 4 or later consider it a steal.

Bye 4

Ben Roethlisberger, Steelers

Faced with starting the season without the same type of receiving firepower he had last year and coming off of arthroscopic knee surgery, Ben Roethlisberger has the look of a backup Fantasy quarterback. The Steelers gave up on speedster Mike Wallace (who accounted for eight of the team's receiving touchdowns last year) and are probably going to begin the year without tight end Heath Miller, who tore his ACL late last season (he accounted for another eight scores). Roethlisberger's run game is improved with the addition of rookie Le'Veon Bell but he's not enough of a threat to suggest Roethlisberger won't shoulder the offensive workload. This isn't to say Roethlisberger can't be a Fantasy dynamo but the reality is that he'll be hard pressed to produce the 20.5 Fantasy point average he had last year. Any improvements the Steelers make around him will go a long way but the team's salary cap is stretched thin and another season without a playoff appearance could be ahead. Tack on the early June knee surgery and you should be careful choosing Roethlisberger as anything more than a fairly good No. 2 Fantasy quarterback with a late-round pick.

Bye 5

Bye 6

Bye 8

QUARTERBACKS (CONT.)

Tony Romo, Cowboys

Tony Romo got a nice raise this offseason when the Cowboys gave him a six-year, $108 million contract extension. Now, he has to raise his production to match his salary. Romo is coming off an inconsistent 2012. He set a career high with 4,903 passing yards and also managed 28 touchdowns on 66 percent completions. But he also had 19 interceptions and struggled to start the year. Romo had just one game with more than 14 Fantasy points in the first five weeks. But he closed the season with at least 20 Fantasy points in seven of his final 12 games. This year, Romo should pick up where last season left off. He has an elite receiver in Dez Bryant and solid complementary weapons in Miles Austin and Jason Witten. Romo should easily eclipse 4,000 passing yards if he can stay healthy -- he's reached 4,000 yards in four of the past six years -- along with at least 26 touchdowns, which he's done five times since 2007. The key is cutting down on the turnovers and being more consistent over the course of the season. We consider Romo a solid No. 1 Fantasy quarterback, and he's worth drafting as early as Round 5 or 6 in the majority of leagues.

Matt Ryan, Falcons

Preseason predictions calling for a career year from Matt Ryan came to fruition in 2012 as he set personal bests in yardage (4,719), completion percentage (68.6), yards per attempt (7.67) and touchdowns (32). And he did it while setting career highs in pass attempts and completions, leading his team to home-field advantage in the playoffs. It all suggests that the Falcons' decision to move to a more pass-friendly system paid off, and there's no way that's going to change in 2013. Ryan was also one of four quarterbacks to post at least 10 games with at least 20 Fantasy points, suggesting he was one of the most consistent options in the game. All of these things should hold true as the Falcons reload for another Super Bowl run, but assuming the team does that Ryan steps up as not just a top-10 Fantasy quarterback but actually a great Draft Day value since he'll get picked after the cream of the crop at the position. Waiting until Round 4 or 5 for Ryan is one of the smartest moves you can make.

Mark Sanchez, Jets

The 2012 season for Mark Sanchez will forever be remembered for one play -- the butt fumble. In Week 12 against New England, Sanchez ran into the backside of his own offensive lineman and lost the ball, which was returned for a touchdown by the Patriots. That play summed up a miserable season where he had 2,883 passing yards, 13 touchdowns and 18 interceptions, which was a significant regression from his 2011 stats (3,474 yards, 26 touchdowns and 18 interceptions). Sanchez is expected to be replaced as the starter for the Jets following the selection of rookie Geno Smith in the second round, and he might not be on the roster in 2013. In the unlikely scenario where he does return as the starter he would have minimal Fantasy value and should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Bye 11

Matt Schaub, Texans

Two years ago Matt Schaub was considered a capable Fantasy starter. Last year he was the guy you took with a great value pick in the middle rounds. This year he'll be a late-round consideration - maybe. Schaub's Fantasy stock tanked last season as he struggled to put up big numbers while younger, more versatile passers put up bigger, better numbers. Those youngsters are now who Fantasy owners are targeting, pushing Schaub down rank lists. Does he have potential for a 4,500 yard, 30 touchdown season? Maybe thanks to big-time targets like Andre Johnson, Arian Foster and rookie DeAndre Hopkins. But outside of those three and maybe tight end Owen Daniels there just isn't a lot to love about Schaub's weapons. Throw in a conservative game plan used by the Texans (Schaub attempted 35 passes or more just six times) and he's just not the crown jewel for Fantasy owners like he was. It doesn't help that he connected for two or more touchdowns seven times in 18 regular and postseason games last year or had just six matchups with 20-plus Fantasy points. Schaub is worth a late-round pick in drafts strictly as a decent backup Fantasy option.

Bye 8

John Skelton, Bengals

John Skelton was acquired from the Bengals off waivers this offseason after he was released by the Cardinals in March. Skelton was the starting quarterback for the Cardinals to open the 2012 season, but he struggled to keep the job due to injury and poor play. He will now be a backup quarterback behind Andy Dalton and has minimal Fantasy value. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Bye 12

Alex Smith, Chiefs

Alex Smith was traded to the Chiefs this offseason, and he will be the starting quarterback in Kansas City. You know Smith's story by now. He was the starter for the 49ers for the majority of the past eight seasons, including last year when he was leading San Francisco toward a Super Bowl berth before suffering a concussion in Week 10. He was replaced by Colin Kaepernick in that game, and Smith was relegated to a backup role, which is why he became expendable this offseason. Smith has never been a standout Fantasy quarterback, and his value doesn't change much with the Chiefs. Coach Andy Reid should be able to maximize Smith's talent, but he has just one main weapon in Dwayne Bowe and little else. Consider Smith a No. 2 Fantasy quarterback at best, and he's not worth drafting in the majority of leagues. He would only be worth using as a bye-week replacement unless he starts out the season playing at a high level, which would then make him worth adding off the waiver wire.

QUARTERBACKS (CONT.)

Geno Smith, Jets

The Jets drafted quarterback Geno Smith in the second round out of West Virginia, and he has the chance to start right away if he can prove better than Mark Sanchez in training camp. Smith has plenty of potential -- in four years with the Mountaineers he completed 988 of 1,465 passes (67.4 pct.) for 11,662 yards (7.96 yards per attempt), 98 touchdowns and 21 interceptions and can run -- but the talent around him is limited. He projects as a No. 2 Fantasy quarterback with upside, and he's only worth a late-round pick in deep seasonal leagues. In rookie-only drafts, Smith is worth a first-round pick, and we would draft him with a mid-round selection in dynasty leagues. He could develop into a quality Fantasy option down the road, but his rookie year could be dicey.

Bye 10

Rusty Smith, Titans

Rusty Smith is expected to battle for a spot along the Titans' depth chart this summer, likely falling into their No. 3/emergency quarterback role. Leave the former Florida Atlantic Owl off of Fantasy rosters unless he falls backward into a starting role.

Bye 8

Brad Sorensen, Chargers

The Chargers drafted quarterback Brad Sorensen in the seventh round of the NFL Draft out of Southern Utah. He will be No. 3 on the depth chart behind Philip Rivers and Charlie Whitehurst and has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 8

Matthew Stafford, Lions

A slow start and a strange end-zone disconnect with Calvin Johnson tripped up Matthew Stafford's numbers last season. But it doesn't mean you should be scared to draft him. Throwing an NFL-record 727 pass attempts last year, Stafford completed 59.8 percent of his passes for 4,967 yards (6.83 yards per throw), adding 20 touchdowns to go with 17 interceptions. He also rushed for four scores. This doesn't sound like the Stafford we came to know and love in 2011 when he surpassed 5,000 passing yards and threw 41 touchdowns. Last season defenses doubled-down on stopping Megatron and Stafford only connected with him on four scores and the rest of the Lions' passing game was depleted by injuries or bad behavior. Stafford finished with seven games over 20 Fantasy points, making him a quasi-bust based on his second-round average draft position. The good news is that he'll remain in the Lions' aggressive offense and his receiving corps should come back strong. The better news is that he'll be available even later in drafts this summer than last, making him a nice bargain choice. Stafford should get attention starting in Round 4 as a no-brainer top-10 Fantasy quarterback.

Bye 9

Drew Stanton, Cardinals

Drew Stanton reunites with Bruce Arians in Arizona and has a chance to start the season as the Cardinals' starting quarterback. Throwing to Larry Fitzgerald always creates the potential for some big numbers, but Stanton hasn't thrown a regular-season pass in two years and has a career 55.6 completion percentage. He's one to watch this pre-season but unless Stanton does something we've yet to see him do in six NFL seasons, Fantasy owners shouldn't consider him on Draft Day.

Bye 9

Ricky Stanzi, Chiefs

Ricky Stanzi will likely compete for a roster spot with the Chiefs this year, and his best case scenario is to be the No. 3 quarterback behind new starter Alex Smith and backup Chase Daniel. Even if Stanzi makes the team, he would have minimal Fantasy value. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Bye 10

Nick Stephens, Cowboys

Nick Stephens will compete for a roster spot with the Cowboys this year but has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day even if he makes the final roster.

Bye 11

Ryan Tannehill, Dolphins

Ryan Tannehill has the chance to surprise Fantasy owners this season in his second year in the NFL. He got a revamped receiving corps with the additions of Mike Wallace, Brandon Gibson and Dustin Keller while also keeping Brian Hartline. He will miss Davone Bess and Reggie Bush, but the Dolphins did a lot to improve Tannehill's targets. He showed some promise as a rookie in 2012, which is something to build on. He had four games with at least 20 Fantasy points, but he had six games with eight points or less. He finished his rookie year with 3,294 passing yards, 12 touchdowns and 13 interceptions and 48 carries for 214 yards and two touchdowns with eight fumbles. The Dolphins want to use Tannehill in the read option more this year, which should showcase his running ability. Tannehill should be considered a low-end No. 2 Fantasy quarterback to open the season, but he's someone to keep your eye on. He might not get drafted in the majority of leagues, but he could turn into a quality playmaker as the season progresses.

Bye 6

Tyrod Taylor, Ravens

The Ravens will list Tyrod Taylor as their backup quarterback again in 2013. Taylor will only carry Fantasy relevance if he lands regular playing time. That would mean that Joe Flacco would have to get hurt or benched, and that wouldn't be a good thing for the Ravens. Taylor shouldn't be on anyone's Fantasy rosters.

Bye 8

Tim Tebow, Patriots

The Patriots signed Tim Tebow in June, and he's expected to compete for a role as the No. 3 quarterback behind Tom Brady and Ryan Mallett. Of course, if he makes the final roster he could switch positions. Keep an eye on Tebow's role with the Patriots, but he has minimal Fantasy value coming into the season. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Bye 10

QUARTERBACKS (CONT.)

Tyler Thigpen, Free Agent

Tyler Thigpen is a free agent this offseason, and he's not expected to return to the Bills, where he was the No. 2 quarterback in 2012. Thigpen had a relationship with former coach Chan Gailey, and the Bills will likely upgrade their quarterbacks before the season. Thigpen can still latch on as a backup somewhere else, but his Fantasy value is minimal. He should be ignored in all leagues.

Scott Tolzien, 49ers

Scott Tolzien will compete for a roster spot with the 49ers this season as a reserve quarterback. Even if he makes the final roster he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Michael Vick, Eagles

Eagles quarterback Michael Vick's career isn't over yet, but being the starter in 2013 is far from guaranteed. He has to compete for the starting job with Nick Foles and possibly rookie Matt Barkley, but we expect Vick to win the job. After being a star in 2010 he has faltered the past two years, and he has to rebuild his on-field reputation again in a new system for coach Chip Kelly. On the surface, Kelly's up-tempo offense suits Vick's style of play, but we have to find out if the two can mesh. Vick also has to deal with the loss of Jeremy Maclin (ACL) and hope DeSean Jackson can return to form. But Vick's problems remain the same: he's injury prone and prone to mistakes. If he starts 16 games we can still see him posting quality stats, but that's no guarantee since he hasn't finished a full season since 2006. He enters this season as a No. 2 Fantasy quarterback, and he's worth drafting with a late-round pick. If you have reasonable expectations for Vick then he'll be a good selection on Draft Day. But if you go in expecting Vick to play like 2010 again then you can expect to be disappointed because it's unlikely that quarterback will ever be seen again.

Joe Webb, Vikings

Joe Webb will move to receiver this season after bottoming out at quarterback in the playoffs last year. With a solid training camp he could scoot ahead of other Vikings receivers on the depth chart. But until that happens Webb is only suitable for drafting late in the deepest of dynasty/keeper leagues.

Adam Weber, Buccaneers

Adam Weber is expected to battle for a spot along the Bucs depth chart this summer. It's going to take a miracle for him to not only find playing time but play well enough to warrant Fantasy use. Leave him alone.

Brandon Weeden, Browns

Brandon Weeden is expected to compete for the starting quarterback job in training camp this summer. He'll learn a new offense, one that calls for a lot of downfield passing. To be effective, Weeden will need a lot of work. He completed just 57.4 percent of his passes last season, including 47 percent that went more than 10 yards. Part of that has to do with an inexperienced receiving corps, but truthfully Weeden wasn't very effective. The only Fantasy owners willing to draft Weeden will be Oklahoma State fans and owners in leagues that start multiple quarterbacks. In most standard leagues Weeden will be an afterthought on Draft Day and a one-week replacement option off waivers during the year.

Pat White, Redskins

The last time Pat White wore an NFL uniform was 2009 when he was with the Dolphins. He left the NFL after that, but now he's back with the Redskins where he will compete for a roster spot. White has the skill set to run the read option offense, but he's fourth on the depth chart at best behind Robert Griffin III, Kirk Cousins and Rex Grossman. Keep an eye on how the Redskins use White, but unless he somehow leapfrogs at least Grossman and Cousins, then he should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Charlie Whitehurst, Chargers

Charlie Whitehurst has the chance to be the No. 2 quarterback for the Chargers this year. He did not play in 2012, and he would only have Fantasy value if something happened to Philip Rivers. Ignore Whitehurst in all leagues on Draft Day.

Russell Wilson, Seahawks

Seahawks quarterback Russell Wilson came out of nowhere to surprise Seattle fans and Fantasy owners with a dynamic performance in his rookie campaign in 2012. He should continue to play at a high level in 2013 but the loss of prized offseason acquisition Percy Harvin for much of the regular season harpoons any upside he had coming into the year. Wilson managed to do just fine without Harvin a season ago, finishing as the No. 9 Fantasy quarterback in standard leagues with at least 19 Fantasy points in nine of his final 11 games, including at least 27 points in his final three outings. That was helped by amassing surprising rushing totals, something that he might have to do again this season even though he said this offseason he doesn't like to run. Figure Wilson to be among the last starting Fantasy passers you'll see taken between Rounds 7 and 9 this season as owners shy away from him knowing he won't have Harvin around to enhance his stats further. You'll want to pair Wilson with a quality No. 2 Fantasy quarterback (think anyone from Eli Manning to Ben Roethlisberger to Andy Dalton), but until he proves you wrong he should be considered a starter from Week 1 at Carolina.

Tyler Wilson, Raiders

Bye 8

Bye 12

QUARTERBACKS (CONT.)

The Raiders added another unproven quarterback to the mix, selecting Arkansas' Tyler Wilson in the fourth round of the NFL Draft. Wilson joins a quarterback room that already has Matt Flynn and Terrelle Pryor, who have a combined three starts between them. Wilson was considered one of the top prospects after throwing 24 touchdown passes and only six interceptions while leading Arkansas to an 11-2 record in 2011. Wilson decided to stay in school for his senior season, but his draft status fell as the team struggled following the firing of former coach Bobby Petrino. Wilson completed 62.1 percent of his passes while throwing for 3,387 yards with 21 touchdowns and 13 interceptions last season. Flynn is expected to begin the offseason as the starter but the Raiders have stressed that there will be competition at all positions. If Wilson can win the starting job in Oakland he could be worth a late-round pick in deep seasonal leagues, but most likely he'll be No. 2 on the depth chart for the Raiders. He should only be drafted with a late-round pick in rookie-only formats.

T.J. Yates, Texans

Bye 8

T.J. Yates is expected to back up starter Matt Schaub in 2013. Unless he finds regular playing time again, Fantasy owners should either stash him in the deepest of dynasty/keeper leagues or ignore him.

Vince Young, Packers

Bye 4

The Packers signed Vince Young in early August to back up Aaron Rodgers. We don't even want to think about what the Packers offense would look like if Young had to run it for several weeks at a time, so all we'll say here is that he shouldn't be drafted unless you want to lock up a handcuff for Rodgers in a deep two-QB league.

RUNNING BACKS

Anthony Allen, Ravens

Anthony Allen will battle for a spot along the running back depth chart in camp this summer for the Ravens. He's a long shot to produce decent stats, so keep him off of standard rosters.

Armando Allen, Bears

Armando Allen is expected to serve as a reserve rusher with the Bears in 2013. With Matt Forte expected back and Michael Bush signed to back him up, Allen's expected to only see carries sparingly. He's not worth drafting so long as he's buried on the depth chart.

Edwin Baker, Chargers

Edwin Baker will try to make the roster. Even if he does land with San Diego out of training camp, he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Lance Ball, Broncos

Lance Ball is back with the Broncos as a reserve running back and special teams contributor. In 2012, Ball had only 42 carries for 158 yards and one touchdown and seven catches for 61 yards and one touchdown. He is not expected to touch the ball enough to help your Fantasy team and should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Montee Ball, Broncos

The Broncos addressed a need at running back when they selected Wisconsin's Montee Ball in the second round of April's draft. Ball is a big back at 5-foot-10, 217 pounds, and he holds the NCAA Division I record with 83 touchdowns. There's a strong chance Ball will start right away for the Broncos, working in tandem with Ronnie Hillman and Knowshon Moreno. We like this fit for Ball because the Broncos running backs ran for 12 touchdowns last season, and Ball should have plenty of chances to score while also coming close to 1,000 rushing yards. He should be viewed as a low-end starting option in seasonal leagues worth a pick as early as Round 4. And in rookie-only formats he's worth drafting in Round 1.

Vick Ballard, Colts

Vick Ballard had the chance to be a standout Fantasy option this season, but the Colts decided he wasn't good enough to handle the rushing duties alone. In June, the Colts added Ahmad Bradshaw, and he will compete with Ballard for playing time. Ballard could still earn the starting job, but the Bradshaw addition dampens his optimism. If Ballard starts he could still be a No. 3 Fantasy running back with a pick in Round 7, but most likely Bradshaw will get the No. 1 job, meaning Ballard is only worth drafting with a pick in Round 9 or 10 at the earliest. Keep an eye on what happens in training camp, but Ballard's value takes a hit with Bradshaw now in the mix.

Bye 8

Bye 8

Bye 8

Bye 9

Bye 9

Bye 8

Kenjon Barner, Panthers

The Panthers are loaded at running back but that didn't stop them from drafting Oregon running back Kenjon Barner with a sixth-round pick in the NFL draft. Barner has 1,123 total yards and 14 touchdowns as a junior and 2,023 total yards and 23 touchdowns as a senior for the Ducks. Barner might compete for kick-return work in training camp while biding his time to get involved in the Panthers offense. While fast and trained to play quickly thanks to his time with Chip Kelly at Oregon, he's slight at 5-foot-9 and 196 pounds. He doesn't do well shedding tackles or playing against physical defenders and his pass protection skills are not very good. Barner is unlikely to help in Fantasy play this season and might be a minimal contributor for a couple of years. He's only worth a late pick in dynasty/keeper league drafts and a mid-to-late pick in rookie-only drafts.

Baron Batch, Steelers

Baron Batch's 2012 season ended in December because of a broken arm, another injury on the young player's medical chart. Batch has been under the knife a number of times in his young career, overshadowing whatever potential he has as a running back. He would need a phenomenal camp to be a relevant part of the Steelers' offense in 2013. Don't plan on drafting him.

Jackie Battle, Free Agent

Jackie Battle is a free agent this offseason, and where he ends up will determine his value. Most likely he will be a reserve running back and play on special teams. Battle spent 2012 with the Chargers and had 95 carries for 311 yards and three touchdowns and 15 catches for 108 yards and one touchdown. He got off to a great start with Ryan Mathews injured with at least 18 Fantasy points in two of his first four games. But from Week 5 on, he combined for just 17 points. Keep an eye on where he signs, but Battle has minimal Fantasy value in the majority of leagues and should not be drafted.

Joiq Bell, Lions

Joiq Bell's career got rocked when the Lions signed Reggie Bush. Now Bell's workload will go to Bush. That's a shame as Bell had a niche carved as the Lions' passing downs back and fourth quarter guy: He'd salt the game away if the Lions were up big and he'd catch a glut of check-down passes if the Lions were playing catch-up. Over the season he had eight or more touches in 10 games and amassed a total of 899 yards from scrimmage and three touchdowns. Those kind of numbers are history so long as Bush stays healthy. Thus, Bell can't be trusted in Fantasy.

Bye 4

Bye 5

Bye 9

Le'Veon Bell, Steelers

Steelers rookie running back Le'Veon Bell was gifted the starting job with the team when he sprained his foot in a mid-August preseason game. He's not expected to be ready for the start of the season and conceivably won't be back until after the Steelers' Week 5 bye. Even when he does come back he's no guarantee to be effective given his foot (he also tweaked his knee in training camp). The 6-foot-1, 244-pound Bell ran for 3,346 yards and 33 touchdowns, catching 78 passes for 531 yards in three seasons with Michigan State. That kind of production will have to wait until he gets back on the field. Until then, look for Jonathan Dwyer to lead a less-than-stellar Steelers rushing attack. Bell's worth a pick starting in Round 9 or 10, though it'll mean shelving him for at least the first five weeks of the season.

Cedric Benson, Free Agent

A Lisfranc sprain cost Cedric Benson the chance to put up some pretty good stats with the Packers in 2012, and now it'll hurt his chances to find a starting job in 2013. On the wrong side of 30, Benson might have to settle for a cheap one-year contract and battle for playing time in training camp. When he did play last year, he was pretty mediocre (3.5 yards per carry over 71 carries), so expectations shouldn't be terribly high. You might end up wasting a perfectly good late pick on Benson.

Giovani Bernard, Bengals

The Bengals took running back Giovani Bernard from North Carolina with a second round pick in the NFL draft. Bernard was an ultra-productive running back for the Tar Heels, rushing for over 1,200 yards and catching at least 45 passes for at least 350 yards in each of his two seasons at the school. In total Bernard had 3,333 yards from scrimmage with 31 touchdowns. Bernard's collegiate numbers are nothing short of awesome but he isn't a complete back. For starters, he's a little small at 5-foot-9 and 202 pounds. Not only has he been banged up over the last year but he tore his ACL in 2010. And his speed is good but it's not elite -- he ran a 4.5 in the 40-yard dash. That combination could limit his workload in the pros, but it's the versatile abilities he has that appeals to the Bengals. Don't quite expect Bernard to unseat BenJarvus Green-Ellis as the main rusher in Cincy but we should see him cut significantly into The Law Firm's carries so long as he's healthy. Bernard will get snagged with a late-round pick in seasonal leagues, a middle- to late-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a second-round pick in rookie-only drafts.

Damien Berry, Ravens

Damien Berry will battle for a spot along the running back depth chart in camp with the Ravens this summer. He's a long shot to produce decent stats, so keep him off of standard rosters.

Bye

Jahvid Best, Lions

Jahvid Best still hasn't been cleared to play football after suffering multiple concussions over a three-month period in 2011. He's still a part of the Lions organization for the next two seasons but he's not expected to contribute. Keep him off of Fantasy rosters.

Bye 9

LeGarrette Blount, Patriots

Patriots running back LeGarrette Blount was traded from Tampa Bay to New England this offseason, and he's trying to compete for a role behind Stevan Ridley and Shane Vereen. Keep an eye on Blount's status in training camp and the preseason, but he's not worth drafting in the majority of leagues. At best he will be No. 3 on the depth chart, but we have minimal expectations for Blount this year.

Bye 10

Tommy Bohanon, Jets

The Jets selected fullback Tommy Bohanon in the seventh round of the NFL Draft out of Wake Forest, and he will compete for a roster spot. Even if he makes the team he would have minimal Fantasy value in the majority of leagues. Ignore him in most formats on Draft Day.

Brandon Bolden, Patriots

Brandon Bolden looked like he was going to be a contributor for the Patriots in 2012 when the season started. He had two touchdowns in the first four games and two games with at least 14 carries through Week 6. But a knee injury and then a four-game suspension for violating the NFL's policy on performance-enhancing substances ruined his season, and he enters this year fighting for playing time with Stevan Ridley, Shane Vereen and LeGarrette Blount. Bolden is not someone to draft in the majority of leagues, but he is someone to monitor. If something happens to Ridley then Bolden could step in and be the goal-line rusher for the Patriots, which would increase his value tremendously.

Bye 9

Dorson Boyce, Redskins

Dorson Boyce will compete for a roster spot for the Redskins this season. Even if he makes the final roster, he has minimal Fantasy value in the majority of leagues. Ignore him in all formats on Draft Day.

Bye 5

Ahmad Bradshaw, Colts

Ahmad Bradshaw signed with the Colts in June, and he is expected to compete with Vick Ballard for the starting job. Most likely, Bradshaw will be the No. 1 running back in Indianapolis, but keep an eye on what happens during training camp. Bradshaw is coming off foot surgery this offseason, but he's expected to be fine. Still, foot issues have been a problem for him during his career, and it's part of the reason he was let go from the Giants. When healthy, however, Bradshaw has been a star. In 2012, Bradshaw missed just two games and finished the season with 221 carries for 1,015 yards and six touchdowns and 23 catches for 245 yards. It's the second time he's had at least 220 carries and 1,000 rushing yards, and he's had at least six touchdowns in every year since 2009. If he starts for the Colts then plan on drafting Bradshaw in Round 6 or 7 in the majority of leagues. But even if Ballard gets the starting nod, Bradshaw will still play a prominent role and is worth drafting no later than Round 9.

Curtis Brinkley, Free Agent

Curtis Brinkley is a free agent this offseason, and where he plays will determine his Fantasy value. In 2012 with the Chargers, Brinkley appeared in 10 games and had 39 carries for 115 yards and 12 catches for 77 yards. He has minimal Fantasy value even if he makes the final roster of his new team. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Andre Brown, Giants

Bye 9

Andre Brown suffered a broken leg in the Giants' fourth preseason game and will miss a sizable portion of the 2013 season. However, the burly third-down/goal-line specialist should return eventually. Brown led the Giants in rushing touchdowns last year but broke his leg (yes, the same injury to the same leg, albeit in a different spot) to end his season prematurely. Brown has a long history of knee and leg injuries and won't ever be in a position to dominate carries so long as second-year back David Wilson is speeding along. With Brown out for a while, owners should only stash him in the deepest of leagues.

Bryce Brown, Eagles

Bye 12

Bryce Brown got Fantasy owners excited in 2012 when he stepped in for the injured LeSean McCoy in Week 12 and was a star for two weeks. Brown had 53 Fantasy points in a standard league against the Panthers and Cowboys, and he helped many owners who were missing McCoy because of a concussion. In total, Brown started four games, but he managed just four Fantasy points in the other two outings against the Bucs and Bengals. He finished the season with 115 carries for 564 yards and four touchdowns and 13 catches for 56 yards. He also had three lost fumbles, which were a problem. This season, Brown will return to a secondary role. He will still get on the field as a complementary option to McCoy, but barring another McCoy injury, he will be the No. 2 running back at best. That limits his value, and he's only worth a late-round pick - especially as a handcuff to McCoy. New coach Chip Kelly will give Brown a chance to carry the ball, but this still remains McCoy's offense.

Donald Brown, Colts

Bye 8

Is this the year Donald Brown is going to break out and be an asset to Fantasy owners? That's the question we've been asking for four seasons. Drafted in the first round in 2009 with lofty expectations, Brown has yet to total 1,000 yards in a single year and has a total of 11 touchdowns (all rushing) in 50 games on 449 carries. Not considered explosive and in a training camp battle with second-year back Vick Ballard, Brown is likely to disappoint again, so why waste a valuable pick on him? Unless things change in training camp, expect Brown to be available with a mid- to late-round pick, which isn't exactly awful since he does have some ability and might aim to play at his best since he's in a contract year. We just haven't seen that ability regularly over his career.

Ronnie Brown, Chargers

Bye 8

Ronnie Brown will return to the Chargers this season, but he will now be No. 3 on the depth chart behind Ryan Mathews and Danny Woodhead. Brown, 31, didn't have many highlights in 2012. He finished the year with 46 carries for 220 yards and 49 catches for 371 yards. It was the first time in his career he failed to score a touchdown, but his reception total was a career high. With Woodhead now in the mix, Brown's receptions will come down, which further limits his value, and his best days are clearly behind him. He should not be drafted in the majority of formats.

Rex Burkhead, Bengals

Bye 12

On Day 3 of the NFL Draft, the Bengals picked up Nebraska running back Rex Burkhead. Burkhead was a grinder for the Huskers, a tough player who was willing to go at less than 100 percent but he doesn't have explosiveness or great speed. He strikes us as a late-round flier only in deeper rookie-only drafts.

Michael Bush, Bears

Bye 8

Despite scoring five touchdowns last season it was evident that Michael Bush's Fantasy production was on the decline. He averaged 3.6 yards per carry and earned 73 of his total 495 yards in one start in place of Matt Forte. Starting for Forte is pretty much when you'll get value out of Bush in 2013 - while new Bears head coach Marc Trestman does like using a big back at the goal line, Bush's workload isn't a cinch unless Forte is sidelined. That makes him a worthwhile late-round pick for those owners who draft Forte but otherwise he's not really a desirable choice in Fantasy play.

Reggie Bush, Lions

Bye 9

Reggie Bush left the Dolphins this offseason to sign with the Lions, and we're excited for his opportunity in Detroit. He has played well since coming to the Dolphins in 2011 when he got a chance to be an every-down back. In 2011, Bush had a career season with 216 carries for 1,086 yards and six touchdowns and 43 catches for 296 yards and a score. He followed that up with a career-high 227 carries for 986 yards and six touchdowns and 35 catches for 292 yards and two touchdowns. Now, Bush goes to a Lions team that should involve him more as a receiver, even promising a potential 70 catches. He has at least 43 catches in five of his seven years, and the Lions will use him as a three-down back. We view Bush as a No. 2 Fantasy running back with upside, and he could total 1,500 yards with about six touchdowns. He is worth drafting in all formats in Round 3 with the potential to be drafted in Round 2 in PPR leagues. This could be a big year for Bush in Motown.

Travaris Cadet, Saints

Travaris Cadet made some waves in August when he totaled 246 yards on 30 catches with two touchdowns over four preseason games, but he ultimately didn't get many opportunities in 2012. The only way that could change in 2013 is if injuries befall other running backs in front of him on the Saints' depth chart. Cadet seems to have very good hands and quickness after the catch but is a long way from being impactful in Fantasy. Though we dig the idea of stashing him in dynasty/keeper leagues for a possible breakout year in 2014 or 2015, he's just not worth owning right now.

Bye 7

Delone Carter, Colts

Injuries shortened Delone Carter's second season but it doesn't mean he'll be a useless piece of the Colts' puzzle in 2013. Carter seemingly has a pedigree for grinding between the tackles and being a goal-line back, scoring from one yard out three times over 10 games last season. He doesn't have much of a chance to get a role bigger than that, so figure him to be a low-rent, one-week replacement option off waivers this year.

Bye 8

Jamaal Charles, Chiefs

Adrian Peterson wasn't the only running back who came back from a torn ACL in 2012 to have a career season. Jamaal Charles was right there with him. He set career highs in carries (285) and rushing yards (1,509) despite having three games with fewer than 10 carries. When he had 17 or more carries, which happened nine times, he finished with double digits in Fantasy points. He also showed his explosiveness with two games with at least 226 rushing yards. Now he gets Andy Reid as his head coach, and he could turn Charles into a beast. While Reid was in Philadelphia he had three primary running backs in Duane Staley, Brian Westbrook and LeSean McCoy. That trio combined for six 1,000-yard rushing seasons, seven 1,500 total-yard seasons, nine seasons with at least 50 catches and five seasons with 10 total touchdowns. The last two times Charles played a full season, which was 2010 and 2012, he had at least 1,700 total yards and six total touchdowns. When you add up everything in his favor it makes Charles a slam-dunk first-round pick in 2013, and he could have a career year.

Bye 10

Tashard Choice, Bills

Tashard Choice is staying with the Bills after he re-signed with Buffalo in March. Choice will likely be No. 3 on the depth chart again behind C.J. Spiller and Fred Jackson. In 2012 he had just 47 carries for 193 yards and one touchdown and four catches for 9 yards. He should not be drafted in the majority of Fantasy leagues.

Bye 12

Tyler Clutts, Texans

The Texans will enlist in Tyler Clutts as a fullback in 2013. Typically fullbacks don't put up much in the way of stats and Clutts is no different. Keep him off Fantasy rosters.

Bye 8

Derrick Coleman, Seahawks

Derrick Coleman will compete for a roster spot with the Seahawks. Keep an eye on his progress in training camp, but he has minimal Fantasy value if he makes the final roster. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Bye 12

Jed Collins, Saints

Jed Collins stole a few touchdowns last season, scoring two over 21 total touches. But as a fullback whose primary job is to block, he's not expected to put up tons of Fantasy stats. Keep him off of rosters.

Bye 7

Michael Cox, Giants

The Giants drafted running back Michael Cox in the seventh round of the NFL Draft out of Massachusetts. Following a late-August injury to Andre Brown, Cox could have a shot at some decent playing time. The burly rusher showed off 4.5 speed at his Pro Day but has a checkered collegiate career that started at Michigan and ended at UMass, where he averaged a gross 3.6 yards per carry. He's fine as a late-round flier but that's about as far as we'd go with Cox at this point.

Bye 9

Mike Cox, Falcons

Fullback Mike Cox will test free agency after totaling 22 yards over seven games with the Falcons in 2012. Whether he stays in Atlanta or moves elsewhere he won't produce enough stats to warrant Fantasy use. Keep the blocking back off Fantasy rosters.

Bye 6

Knile Davis, Chiefs

The Chiefs drafted Arkansas running back Knile Davis with a compensatory pick in the third round of the NFL Draft, grabbing a bulldozer to take some of the load off Jamaal Charles. Davis has a nice blend of size and speed, resulting in comparisons to former Razorbacks star Darren McFadden. Davis will now be the No. 2 running back for the Chiefs and the handcuff option to Charles. He's worth a late-round pick in seasonal leagues and a mid-round pick in rookie-only formats.

Bye 10

Tristan Davis, Redskins

Tristan Davis will compete for a roster spot for the Redskins this season. Even if he makes the final roster, he has minimal Fantasy value in the majority of leagues. Ignore him in all formats on Draft Day.

Bye 5

Jeff Demps, Buccaneers

Jeff Demps missed his rookie year in 2012 with the Patriots after he was put on injured reserve with a leg injury, and he was traded this offseason to the Bucs. It is unknown if Demps will give up his track career for the NFL, but even if he does play for Tampa Bay this season he would have minimal Fantasy value (Demps won a silver medal at the 2012 Summer Olympics, and he was a track star as well as a standout football player at the University of Florida). Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

RUNNING BACKS (CONT.)

James Develin, Patriots

Bye 10

James Develin will compete for a roster spot with the Patriots in 2013, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve running back. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Dorin Dickerson, Bills

Bye 12

Dorin Dickerson will compete for playing time with the Bills in 2013, but his Fantasy value is minimal. He had one carry for minus-8 yards and nine catches for 117 yards in 2012, and his primary role is as a blocker. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Anthony Dixon, 49ers

Bye 9

Anthony Dixon is a reserve running back for the 49ers and will likely be No. 4 on the depth chart behind Frank Gore, Kendall Hunter and LaMichael James. That doesn't mean Dixon doesn't have a role because he could be the short-yardage back this season. In 2012, Dixon had 21 carries for 78 yards and two touchdowns, and his production could be somewhat similar barring an injury. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Shaun Draughn, Chiefs

Bye 10

Shaun Draughn enters the season likely as the No. 3 running back in Kansas City behind Jamaal Charles and rookie Knile Davis. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues. Draughn finished third in carries in 2012 behind Charles and Peyton Hillis. Last year, Draughn managed 59 carries for 233 yards and two touchdowns and 24 catches for 158 yards. He would only be worth owning if something happens to Charles and Davis struggles to be the No. 2 option.

Lance Dunbar, Cowboys

Bye 11

Lance Dunbar has the chance to be the No. 2 running back for the Cowboys this year behind DeMarco Murray. That could be an important role given Murray's injury history (he's missed nine games the past two years). Dunbar will compete with Phillip Tanner and rookie Joseph Randle for the backup job, and whoever wins is worth a late-round pick, especially if you invest in Murray with an early-round selection (our choice for the job is Randle). Dunbar did not play well in 2012 with 21 carries for 75 yards and six catches for 33 yards, but his touches could increase this year.

Jonathan Dwyer, Steelers

Bye 5

The draft was unkind to Steelers running back Jonathan Dwyer. Not only did he watch the team draft a powerful rusher in rookie Le'Veon Bell but his name was reportedly dangled in trade talks. Dwyer is still with the Steelers but he faces an uphill climb for playing time with Bell arriving. Odds are Bell will unseat Dwyer as the primary back, leaving scraps for Dwyer on a weekly basis, if at all. Even with a contract year coming up, Dwyer is nothing more than late-round material while Bell should go with a Top 80 pick in every league.

Nate Eachus, Chiefs

Bye 10

Nate Eachus will compete for a role in Kansas City's backfield and work on special teams. Even if he makes the final roster he would not be worth drafting in the majority of leagues. In 2012, Eachus had five carries for 18 yards and one catch for 19 yards.

Andre Ellington, Cardinals

Bye 9

The Cardinals drafted running back Andre Ellington in the seventh round of the NFL Draft out of Clemson. He is expected to be No. 4 on the depth chart behind Rashard Mendenhall, Ryan Williams and fellow rookie Stepfan Taylor, but Ellington should compete for playing time. Both rookies could also be the running back duo of the future for the Cardinals. We don't recommend drafting Ellington in the majority of standard leagues, but he is worth a late-round flier in rookie-only formats.

Bradie Ewing, Falcons

Bye 6

Bradie Ewing tore his ACL in early August and missed all of his rookie season. The plan is for him to come back from the injury and aid in the run game in 2013. He's not expected to have a significant role in the offense and as such shouldn't be on any Fantasy rosters.

Mario Fannin, Broncos

Bye 9

Mario Fannin will look to make the final roster for the Broncos this year as a reserve running back. He spent the past two years on injured reserve. In 2011, Fannin suffered a torn ACL. Last year, he suffered a ruptured Achilles tendon. Keep an eye on his progress in training camp, but Fannin should not be drafted in most leagues.

Justin Forsett, Jaguars

Bye 9

Playing as a backup in Houston paid off for Justin Forsett, who rushed 63 times for 374 yards, including an 81-yard touchdown. It was enough to interest the rival Jaguars, who signed Forsett to compete for the backup running back role behind Maurice Jones-Drew. Reuniting with offensive coordinator Jedd Fisch is fun but expectations are minimal for this season.

Matt Forte, Bears

Bye 8

Fantasy running backs don't come much safer than Matt Forte. The Bears running back is on a five-year streak of landing at least 1,400 total yards per season, though he hasn't produced double-digit touchdowns since his rookie campaign. He'll work with a new playcaller in head coach Marc Trestman, who has a solid track record of using his running backs, including a single rusher totaling over 1,500 total yards in four of five years in Montreal. Forte is a good fit for Trestman though the coach has been in favor of using a different back at the goal line in the past. Expect Forte to remain a constant for the Bears, making him worthy of a second-round choice.

Arian Foster, Texans

If not for a back injury that has kept him out of training camp, Arian Foster would be a rock-solid No. 2 Fantasy running back. But Foster didn't participate in any camp work after initially hurting his calf in a spring OTA workout and then needing injections to help with the pain in his back in mid-August. With no definitive timetable for Foster's return, Fantasy owners must be cautious. The Texans' stud posted another season with at least 1,600 total yards and 12 total touchdowns in 2012 but also had more than 400 carries over 18 total games. Typically when a player has that kind of workload one year he declines statistically the next and has a higher chance of getting hurt. Foster's proof. His breathtaking production might be too alluring to pass up, particularly for one of the other backs in the draft not named Peterson, but there is some concern he could struggle because of the wear and tear he's put on his body. This does not mean you have to pass on Foster, but it does mean that more than ever backing him up with Ben Tate is vital. If you take Foster with an early round pick, plan on taking Tate in late Round 6/early Round 7 just to make sure you protect yourself. Other owners will start aiming to take Tate in late Round 7 on the hope Foster misses the start of the season.

Johnathan Franklin, Packers

The Packers drafted rookie running back Johnathan Franklin in the fourth round of the NFL Draft from UCLA, and he's expected to compete for a prominent role right away. Green Bay also added rookie Eddie Lacy in Round 2, and they still have DuJuan Harris, James Starks and Alex Green on the roster. But Franklin can potentially start if he plays well in training camp and the preseason. Franklin had a highly productive career at UCLA. He rushed for 4,403 yards, which ranks fifth in Pac-12 Conference history, and had 4,936 all-purpose yards. A solid 5-foot-10, 201 pounds, Franklin averaged 5.59 yards per carry after starting 45 games in his career. Keep an eye on his role in training camp, and if he earns the starting job he would be worth a pick as early as Round 6 in most leagues. But if he's lower on the depth chart, potentially No. 2 behind Lacy, then take Franklin with a late-round pick. In rookie-only drafts, Franklin is worth drafting in Round 3.

Terrance Ganaway, Rams

Terrance Ganaway has the chance to be the No. 4 running back for the Rams this year. That would put Ganaway in the mix with Daryl Richardson, Zac Stacy and Isaiah Pead for playing time, but Ganaway is the low man on the depth chart in that scenario. Still, Ganaway could earn a role if the guys in front of him struggle, and we'd keep an eye on his production in training camp. Ganaway did not have a carry in his rookie year in 2012, but if he gets a chance for increased playing time he could play at a high level and then would be worth adding off the waiver wire.

Bye 8

Mike Gillislee, Dolphins

The Dolphins drafted running back Mike Gillislee from the University of Florida in the fifth round, and he's expected to compete for playing time right away. The Dolphins have Lamar Miller and Daniel Thomas on top of the depth chart, but Gillislee could easily get in the mix for carries, especially ahead of Thomas. Gillislee spent most of his career at Florida as a backup but started 11 games in his senior season, rushing for 1,152 yards and scored 10 rushing touchdowns. He rushed for 2,072 yards on 389 carries (5.3 yards per carry) and scored 20 touchdowns during his career. He also caught 23 passes for 182 yards and scored two touchdowns through the air. Gillislee has the chance to be a steal for the Dolphins and Fantasy owners with a late-round pick. Miller has plenty of upside to be the starter, but he's unproven. If Miller struggles, Gillislee could step in and be a solid contributor as a rookie. He should be taken with a late-round pick in seasonal leagues and at least a third-round pick in rookie-only formats.

Mike Goodson, Jets

Mike Goodson signed with the Jets this offseason, but before he could get to training camp he ran into the law. Goodson was arrested in mid-May on drug possession and weapon charges in New Jersey and might be in a battle with the courts before another football team. That's too bad since it looked like Goodson was headed toward earning a passing downs role with the Jets and working in tandem with Chris Ivory. Until his situation stemming from his arrest is cleared, Fantasy owners shouldn't draft Goodson. Bilal Powell and Joe McKnight will battle for his role.

Frank Gore, 49ers

Frank Gore remains the starting running back for the 49ers and their best Fantasy option in the backfield no matter how many times we expect him to falter. Gore, despite the 49ers adding LaMichael James and Brandon Jacobs last year, still dominated the ball with 258 carries for 1,214 yards and eight touchdowns and 28 catches for 234 yards and a touchdown. He had double digits in Fantasy points in 11 games, including five of the final six games to close the regular season. Gore is definitely headed for a decline at some point in the near future -- he'll be 30 this season and has more than 2,200 total touches -- but you have to go into the season with him as a solid No. 2 running back worth drafting as early as Round 3. Kendall Hunter and James will take touches from Gore, especially with the 49ers wanting to keep him fresh for the playoffs, but we've seen this before. Gore has at least 1,300 total yards and six touchdowns in six of the past seven years, and he should remain at that level of production again this season.

Ryan Grant, Free Agent

The Packers brought back Ryan Grant to help their run game toward the end of the regular season. He did in one game, rumbling for 114 total yards and two touchdowns against the Titans. But that was the extent of his contributions with the Pack as he didn't get more than eight touches in any other game. Now he's a free agent looking for whatever work he can get. We wouldn't draft him.

Bye 6

Bye 10

Bye 9

Cyrus Gray, Chiefs

Cyrus Gray will look to have a role in the Kansas City backfield this season, and he could be No. 4 on the depth chart behind Jamaal Charles, Knile Davis and Shaun Draughn. That's likely a best-case scenario, but Gray has minimal Fantasy value. He was a sixth-round pick out of Texas A&M in 2012 and finished with just seven carries for 44 yards and two catches for 18 yards in 10 games. Keep an eye on his role in training camp, but he should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Bye 10

Jonas Gray, Dolphins

Jonas Gray will compete for a roster spot with the Dolphins in 2013, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve running back. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 6

Alex Green, Packers

Alex Green will be part of the Packers' running back crew in 2013, but probably not a featured part. Green led the team in rushing in 2012 but did so on a 3.4-yard rushing average. He never posted more than seven Fantasy points in a game. Now he'll battle DuJuan Harris for playing time behind the likes of rookies Eddie Lacy and Johnathan Franklin. We wouldn't draft Green.

Bye 4

BenJarvus Green-Ellis, Bengals

BenJarvus Green-Ellis is probably going to be a running back you settle for on Draft Day, not target. Even though he set a personal best in rushing yards last year with 1,094, he only scored six times despite getting a career-high 278 carries. A closer look reveals that only 21 carries came from inside the 10-yard line and of those 21, only 10 came at the goal line. He scored on four of the 10 and might have had more if not for an 0-for-3 day at the goal line with a fumble at the Jaguars in Week 4. That appeared to be the game that sent his workload near the goal line off track and perhaps forced the Bengals to find help for him on the ground. They did exactly that when they took Giovani Bernard as the first running back selected in April's draft. Bernard should not only take passing downs away from Green-Ellis but also has the potential to cut into the starter's workload. Expect fewer carries and thus fewer yards from Green-Ellis, though the touchdown production might increase since The Law Firm should have the goal-line job. Green-Ellis is fine as a pick in Round 8 or so as the last decent Flex running back on the board.

Bye 12

Shonn Greene, Titans

Shonn Greene signed with the Titans this offseason, and he's expected to share carries with Chris Johnson but in a reserve role. The Titans are excited about Greene, who is coming off a productive year in 2012 with a career high in carries (276), yards (1,063) and touchdowns (eight). He still remained a mediocre Fantasy running back, but he could be a good complement to Johnson. He had just six games with double digits in Fantasy points, and he had six games with five points or less. Greene offers little as a receiver -- he had 19 catches for 151 yards in 2012 -- but he will work at the goal line. Greene still retains value as a No. 3 Fantasy running back. Johnson will get the majority of work, but Greene could be around eight touchdowns again with close to 700 rushing yards. That's not horrible as a key reserve with a mid-round pick.

Bye 8

John Griffin, Jets

John Griffin is hoping to make the final roster for the Jets as a reserve running back. Even if he makes the team he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 10

Chris Gronkowski, Chargers

Chris Gronkowski signed with the Chargers this offseason as a free agent, but he's not expected to get much playing time. In 2012, Gronkowski appeared in 14 games for the Broncos and had just one catch for 11 yards. Keep an eye on his role, but he has minimal Fantasy value and should not be drafted in most leagues.

Bye 8

Jewel Hampton, 49ers

Jewel Hampton will compete for a roster spot with the 49ers during training camp, but he has minimal Fantasy value even if he makes the team. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 9

Montario Hardesty, Browns

Montario Hardesty is entering a contract year, but money isn't the only thing on his mind going into the season. Hardesty suffered a thumb injury in training camp and then underwent knee surgery, which could keep him out for the beginning of the year. He was expected to be the No. 2 running back behind Trent Richardson before Dion Lewis emerged, and then Lewis (leg) was lost for the start of the season. Hardesty could now regain his role when healthy, but it's unknown when that will be. We wouldn't draft Hardesty in the majority of leagues, but keep an eye on him when he returns. He could eventually emerge as the handcuff for Richardson, but he has to prove he can stay on the field first.

Bye 10

Jamie Harper, Titans

We once had high hopes for Jamie Harper but it looks like he'll play third fiddle in the Titans' run game. That's because Chris Johnson remains the lead back with Shonn Greene brought in via free agency to aid him. Harper will languish on the bench unless something happens to one of the backs in front of him. Keep him off of Fantasy rosters.

Bye 8

DuJuan Harris, Packers

DuJuan Harris was a classic scrap-heap find for the Packers last year as he buoyed their offense into the postseason, but that's ancient history after the team took two running backs -- Eddie Lacy and Johnathan Franklin -- in the NFL draft. Harris finished the season and postseason (six games) with 257 yards and four touchdowns on 62 carries (4.14 rush avg.) and 81 yards on nine catches. Nice numbers, but the rookies figure to be fixtures in the offense going forward. Don't be surprised to see Harris go undrafted this summer.

Stanley Havili, Colts

Stanley Havili was traded from the Eagles to the Colts this offseason in exchange for defensive end Clifton Geathers. Havili was a fullback for the Eagles in 2012 and had just six carries for 22 yards and a touchdown and seven catches for 43 yards. He doesn't touch the ball enough to matter for Fantasy owners and should be ignored in all leagues.

Roy Helu, Redskins

Roy Helu went from the potential starter for the Redskins entering 2012 to searching for a role this season. Helu was replaced by Alfred Morris as the starter last season before he was placed on injured reserve with turf toe in Week 4. He comes back this year with the chance to play on passing downs behind Morris, but Helu has to prove he's healthy and can handle the role. Evan Royster is also in the mix as an option behind Morris, and Helu has a lot to show Fantasy owners before they can count on him. We don't recommend drafting Helu in the majority of leagues, but he is someone to monitor. If something happens to Morris, then Helu might get a shot to resurrect his career.

Dan Herron, Bengals

Dan Herron remains on the Bengals' roster after doing minimal work on offense. We don't see him getting an opportunity to pick up more work. Leave him off of rosters.

Jacob Hester, Broncos

Jacob Hester is back with the Broncos this year, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a fullback. In 2012, Hester appeared in just four games after signing with the team in November and had only 17 carries for 81 yards and two touchdowns and one catch for 7 yards. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Tim Hightower, Free Agent

Tim Hightower is looking for a new team after failing to play with anyone in 2012. Hightower last played with the Redskins in 2011, but he suffered a torn ACL in Week 7 and has yet to land with a new team. If he does sign somewhere this year, he would be a reserve running back and likely get minimal touches. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Bye 4

Bye 8

Bye 5

Bye 12

Bye 9

Lef Hilliard, Jets

Lex Hilliard will return to the Jets this year as a reserve running back and special teams contributor. Hilliard finished 2012 with the Jets where he had nine carries for 33 yards and four catches for 23 yards. He has minimal Fantasy value and should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Peyton Hillis, Free Agent

Peyton Hillis is a free agent this offseason, and he will look to rebound this year after two down seasons. After struggling in Cleveland in 2011, Hillis signed a one-year deal with the Chiefs in 2012. He struggled with an ankle injury early in the year and playing second fiddle to Jamaal Charles and had just 85 carries for 309 yards and one touchdown and 10 catches for 62 yards. He had one game with double digits in Fantasy points. Hillis will likely sign another short-term deal with a new team, but he has lot to prove before Fantasy owners can count on him. Keep an eye on where he lands, but he should only be drafted with a late-round pick.

Ronnie Hillman, Broncos

If the Broncos have their way, Ronnie Hillman and Montee Ball will lead the backfield this year. That would be good news to anyone who invests in Hillman on Draft Day. Hillman should be No. 2 on the depth chart and get plenty of looks. His best game as a rookie was his last game in the playoff loss against Baltimore. With Willis McGahee out and Knowshon Moreno going down with a knee injury, Hillman had 22 carries for 83 yards and three catches for 20 yards. Overall, he finished the season with 85 carries for 330 yards and one touchdown and 10 catches for 62 yards. Pass protection was an issue for him, but the Broncos are excited about his potential as he's worked hard on that area this spring. McGahee has also since been released. He is worth a late-round pick in the majority of leagues, and Hillman could develop into a quality Fantasy option as the year goes on.

Jon Hoese, Raiders

Jon Hoese will compete for a role in Oakland this season, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve running back. Even if he makes the final roster, he would not be worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Kendall Hunter, 49ers

Kendall Hunter missed the 49ers' run to the Super Bowl last year when his season ended in Week 12 with a ruptured Achilles. Before the injury, Hunter had 72 carries for 371 yards and two touchdowns and nine catches for 60 yards. He's already done some team drills this off-season and should be ready to compete with LaMichael James for the No. 2 job behind Frank Gore when training camp opens. Hunter should have the inside track on James, but even if he wins the job he would only be worth drafting with a late-round pick, especially as a handcuff option for Gore. At some point Gore will falter, and Hunter could be the one to benefit, so keep him on your radar if he's healthy and able to beat out James for the No. 2 spot.

Bye 10

Bye 9

Bye 7

Bye 9

Henry Hynoski, Giants

Henry Hynoski will be the starting fullback for the Giants in 2013, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a blocker. He had five carries for 20 yards and 11 catches for 50 yards and a touchdown, but he doesn't touch the ball enough to be relevant in the majority of leagues. Ignore him in most formats on Draft Day.

Ewil Igwenagu, Eagles

Ewil Igwenagu will try to earn a roster spot with the Eagles this season, but he has minimal Fantasy value even if he makes the final roster. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Mark Ingram, Saints

Which Mark Ingram are we going to get in 2013: The one who spent the first half of 2012 getting limited touches or the one who averaged 12.8 carries per game and 4.1 yards per carry in the second half of 2012? Hopefully it's the latter, though with other running backs threatening to take reps away from Ingram, whose upside seems limited. In fact, he's only posted double-digit Fantasy points when he scores 60 percent of the time in his career. He has four games where he has scored and still hasn't posted 10 Fantasy points in standard formats. Ingram will need several running backs to miss playing time in order for him to become the monster in Fantasy we hoped he'd become. Ideally, Ingram is worth a pick starting in Round 8 or 9 as a quality reserve rusher worth starting when facing a good matchup. Drafting him along with another Saints running back (Darren Sproles in Rounds 3-4 or Pierre Thomas in Rounds 11-12) isn't a bad way to attack your running back corps.

Chris Ivory, Saints

Chris Ivory has been freed from the Saints' depth chart, landing with the Jets in a draft weekend trade. He's expected to handle a large amount of carries as the team's primary ball carrier and goal-line force. Ivory has a 5.1 rushing average and scored two touchdowns over 40 carries last year, both coming on long, powerful runs. Ivory could be in line for 15 touches of week with the Jets and will grind behind one of the better run-blocking lines in football. There's some appeal for Ivory as a No. 3 running back, making him a good mid-round option in seasonal leagues.

Brandon Jackson, Free Agent

Brandon Jackson is a free agent after playing in just two games with the Browns last year. He's a long way from being a relevant Fantasy player, so keep him off of rosters.

Bye 9

Fred Jackson, Bills

Fred Jackson went from a viable Fantasy running back from 2009-11 to a potential roadblock for C.J. Spiller. And Fantasy owners just want him out of the way. Jackson was set up for a productive year in 2012 before a knee injury in Week 1 derailed his season. When he went down, Spiller took off, and now Jackson could find himself playing second fiddle at age 32. If Jackson remains in Buffalo, which is a strong possibility, he will be the backup to Spiller. But the Bills should still give Jackson plenty of work. He will likely be a No. 3 Fantasy running back on Draft Day, and we would take him with a mid-round selection.

Bye 12

Steven Jackson, Falcons

For the first time in his 10-year career, Steven Jackson won't be playing for the Rams. He signed with the Falcons this offseason, and he will be the new starter in Atlanta. The Falcons - and Fantasy owners -- hope to get the Jackson we saw at the end of last season because that running back was a beast. After a slow start in 2012, Jackson turned it on following the bye in Week 9. He closed the season with double digits in Fantasy points in six of his final eight games and had at least eight points in each outing. For the season, Jackson had 257 carries for 1,042 yards and four touchdowns and 38 catches for 321 yards. He has been a workhorse for the majority of his career -- and a successful one at that. Since 2005, Jackson has at least 1,300 total yards in all but one season, which was 2007 when he was limited to 12 games. He still managed 1,273 total yards that year. We'd like to see Jackson score more (he has one season with double digits in touchdowns), which should happen with the Falcons, and coach Mike Smith already plans to involve Jackson in the passing game. He should remain a solid No. 2 Fantasy running back, and he's worth drafting with a second-round pick. Jackson, who will be 30 in July, is definitely near a decline, but he should still have plenty of positive moments this season with a Super Bowl-contending team.

Bye 6

Brandon Jacobs, Free Agent

Brandon Jacobs is looking for a job this offseason after he was cut by the 49ers last year in a wasted season. Jacobs appeared in just two games for the 49ers and had five carries for 7 yards. It's the only time in his eight-year career he's failed to score a touchdown. Jacobs' best days are behind him, but he might land with a team as a short-yardage back. Keep an eye on where he ends up, but Jacobs isn't worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Javarris James, Free Agent

Javarris James will be looking for a job this offseason as a free agent. Even if he makes the final roster for a team he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in the majority of leagues on Draft Day.

LaMichael James, 49ers

LaMichael James should have a bigger role this season than he did as a rookie, but his Fantasy value will remain limited. As a rookie in 2012, James was limited to 27 carries for 125 yards and three catches for 29 yards in seven games, including the playoffs. He was a healthy scratch for the first 11 games, but this year he should be ready from Week 1. Still, James will be No. 2 on the depth chart at best behind Frank Gore, and we expect Kendall Hunter to be ahead of him if he's is 100 percent healthy following last year's Achilles injury. James might be worth a late-round flier in PPR leagues, but his value in standard formats will be limited. We hope he gets more touches this season and more work, but we're not overly optimistic as long as Gore and Hunter are healthy.

Mike James, Buccaneers

The Buccaneers took Miami running back Mike James in the NFL Draft. James is a versatile back who gives a good effort but doesn't have a lot of speed. He's a good blocker, which could help him earn some playing time. He's probably worth a late-round flier in rookie-only drafts.

Jawan Jamison, Redskins

The Redskins drafted running back Jawan Jamison from Rutgers in the seventh round, and he will compete for a role this season as part of a crowded backfield. Keep an eye on his progress in training camp, but we don't expect much from Jamison this season. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Rashad Jennings, Raiders

Rashad Jennings signed with the Raiders in early April where he'll battle for the backup job behind starter Darren McFadden. Eventually he'll come across some playing time since McFadden has a hard time staying healthy. After missing all of 2011 with a knee injury Jennings averaged a weak 2.8 yards per carry over 101 totes last year with the Jaguars adding 130 yards on 19 catches (6.8 avg.) before shoulder and head injuries ended his year. He scored twice in 10 games with one carry for more than 20 yards. He's worth a late pick, especially if you draft McFadden with a pick in Round 3 or 4, but expectations shouldn't be too high.

Bye 9

Chris Johnson, Titans

Chris Johnson has totaled at least 1,400 total yards in each of his five NFL seasons, but his past few seasons have delivered headaches to his Fantasy owners. Two years ago he missed camp, had some conditioning issues and struggled to stay consistent. Last year he was in camp and was seemingly in better shape but still performed at a gross level until he was able to exploit some weak opponents and post numbers in blowout losses. The Titans had enough - they improved the offensive line with veteran Andy Levitre and first-round pick Chase Warmack and also got Shonn Greene to aid in their run game. Greene will pick up the goal-line work Johnson didn't have much of in the first place but also be there to complement Johnson and potentially replace him if he doesn't get off to a good start for the third year in a row. A difficult schedule and a potential dip in carries combined with Johnson's underwhelming numbers make him a little scary but consider this: He's still averaged at least 90 total yards per game in each of his last two seasons and last year had nine games with at least 10 Fantasy points. And now his offensive line shouldn't be a problem. Johnson will slide out of the first round on Draft Day but is worth a look at the halfway point of the second round, particularly if you pencil him in as your No. 2 running back.

Bye 8

Bye 5

Bye 5

David Johnson, Steelers

David Johnson is a blocking H-back for the Steelers. He typically doesn't produce enough stats to warrant Fantasy use and in 2012 missed the entire season with an injury. Keep him off of rosters.

Bye 5

Jeremiah Johnson, Broncos

Jeremiah Johnson will look to make the final roster for the Broncos this year as a reserve running back. He did not play in 2012, and in 2011 in a limited role, Johnson had 14 carries for 77 yards and seven catches for 62 yards. He is not expected to be a significant contributor and should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Bye 9

Quinn Johnson, Titans

Quinn Johnson will battle for the starting fullback role with the Titans this summer, a job he should get. But even if he ends up starting, he's not expected to put up many stats. Leave him off of Fantasy rosters.

Bye 8

Felix Jones, Free Agent

Felix Jones is a free agent this offseason, and where he signs will determine his Fantasy value. He's spent the past two years as the No. 2 running back for the Cowboys behind DeMarco Murray, and we would expect Jones to be a backup running back wherever he lands. Keep an eye on his future destination, but Jones is only worth drafting with a late-round pick in the majority of leagues.

Greg Jones, Texans

Greg Jones left Jacksonville for Houston this offseason, staying in the AFC South but moving to a title contender. It's there where he'll pop open holes for Arian Foster and the Texans' ground game. He's one of the best at playing fullback but is older than most at the position and doesn't put up many Fantasy stats. Leave him off rosters.

RUNNING BACKS (CONT.)Taiwan Jones, Raiders

Taiwan Jones is likely moving from offense to defense this season in an effort to get more playing time. Jones will likely be a cornerback for the Raiders after two years as a backup running back where he had just 22 carries for 94 yards and two catches for 25 yards. Keep an eye on what he does during training camp, but a move to defense will negate any Fantasy value he has in the majority of leagues. And owners in IDP leagues should just monitor how Jones does. He won't be worth drafting right away, but he could be someone to add off the waiver wire if he starts out playing well.

Bye 5Maurice Jones-Drew, Jaguars

Maurice Jones-Drew figures to be one of the most polarizing Fantasy running backs this summer. On one hand he's coming off a Lisfranc fracture, averaged "only" 83.3 total yards per game in 2012 and will be 28 when the season starts. On the other, he's considered among the most prolific Fantasy rushers thanks to averaging at least 110 total yards per game over the last three years while easily collecting over 320 touches in each season. All signs point to Jones-Drew having a much different offseason than he had a year ago when he sat out of training camp because of a contract dispute. Now Jones-Drew is comfortable finishing out the final year on his deal with the Jaguars and should be in a role similar to what we're used to seeing if he looks OK in camp (that's a big if). That's looking good after he shed a walking boot and began jogging in early April. Though the Jaguars' offensive system is getting a makeover with the zone-blocking scheme coming into town, Jones-Drew still figures to be a prominent option for Fantasy owners to target as a No. 2 player with the potential to put up numbers like a No. 1. Expect him to get picked somewhere between 20th and 30th overall in all drafts.

Bye 9Kyle Juszczyk, Ravens

The Ravens drafted Harvard fullback Kyle Juszczyk in April, giving some rare competition to veteran Vonta Leach. But the truth is Juszczyk is a fantastic, versatile fullback who could push Vonta Leach for work eventually but not pick up a ton of stats at any point over his career. Fantasy owners shouldn't consider him for any roster spot.

Bye 8Eric Kettani, Redskins

Eric Kettani will compete for a roster spot for the Redskins this season. Even if he makes the final roster, he has minimal Fantasy value in the majority of leagues. Ignore him in all formats on Draft Day.

Bye 5John Kuhn, Packers

John Kuhn appears to be locked into a fullback role for the Packers after scoring just one touchdown last season. Don't draft Kuhn outside the absolute deepest of leagues. Grab him off waivers during the season if you're desperate for help.

Bye 4Eddie Lacy, Packers

Eddie Lacy was considered a borderline first-round talent, but it was in the second round when the Packers took the Alabama runner in the NFL draft. Lacy is the draft's most decorated running back after rushing for 1,322 yards and 17 touchdowns with the Crimson Tide last season. He averaged at least 6.5 yards per carry in each of three college seasons and scored 30 rushing touchdowns and a pair of receiving touchdowns over that career. Conditioning issues and some health concerns stemming from this spring could have been part of the reason why his stock fell. But that doesn't matter now as he has a shot to be an impact player for the Packers and Fantasy owners. Green Bay hasn't run the ball as much as other teams thanks in part to two factors: Aaron Rodgers playing well and no back stepping up. Lacy might solidify a ground game that has been nearly forgotten over the past few seasons. The potential for an every-down back in the Packers offense is huge -- maybe 1,500 total yards and 10 touchdowns -- but until Lacy is healthy and is proven to be in such a role owners shouldn't get excited. As of now he's worth a speculative mid-round pick in drafts -- think Round 7 or 8 -- but that could change with a couple of positive reports from camp and a stint with the first-team offense in the preseason. He'll probably be an early-round selection in dynasty and rookie-only formats as well.

Bye 4Jorvorskie Lane, Dolphins

Jorvorskie Lane is the fullback for the Dolphins, and he has minimal Fantasy value since he doesn't touch the ball enough to be successful. In 2012, his rookie year, Lane had 13 carries for 13 yards and two touchdowns. He also added 11 catches for 79 yards and a score. If Lane had more chances he might produce at a higher level, but he is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Bye 6Marcus Lattimore, 49ers

The 49ers made an investment for the future when they drafted running back Marcus Lattimore in the fourth round of the NFL Draft out of South Carolina. Lattimore can now have a redshirt season in 2013 to heal up his injured knee, and he could end up as San Francisco's running back of the future once Frank Gore is gone. The 49ers have no need for Lattimore this season with Gore, Kendall Hunter and LaMichael James on the roster, but in 2014 we could be talking about Lattimore as a sleeper. He was projected as a top prospect before his gruesome knee injury, but now he gets to take his time in his recovery. He should not be drafted in most seasonal leagues, but he is worth selecting with a mid-round pick in rookie-only formats.

Bye 9Vonta Leach, Ravens

Vonta Leach is an important part of the Ravens' offense because he opens up holes for Ray Rice to run through. He's nowhere near as important to Fantasy owners: he had 175 total yards last year and has under 1,000 total yards in his 11-year career. Furthermore, the team added rookie fullback Kyle Juszczyk with a fourth-round pick, adding competition for his job. Leach shouldn't be a part of Fantasy rosters.

Bye 8

Brian Leonard, Buccaneers

Brian Leonard reunited with his old college coach, Greg Schiano, in Tampa Bay. It's there where he'll battle for playing time this summer. Though he had his first season with over 100 rush yards he also had his first full year with under 100 receiving yards. He hasn't scored since 2010. You're not going to dominate your league with this guy in your lineup.

Mikel Leshoure, Lions

Mikel Leshoure went from the starting running back for the Lions in 2012 to potentially third string this year. He was demoted during training camp from No. 2 behind Reggie Bush to No. 3 behind Joique Bell as well. Leshoure can still move ahead of Bell, and he has the chance to still work in short-yardage situations, but his Fantasy value is down compared to last year with the addition of Bush. We would only draft Leshoure with a late-round pick in standard leagues, and he's only worth a flier in deep PPR formats.

Dion Lewis, Browns

Dion Lewis, who was traded by the Eagles to the Browns this offseason, was looking like a prime candidate to be the No. 2 running back behind Trent Richardson. But he suffered a broken leg in the second preseason game, and he could be out to start the season -- or the entire year. We hope he's able to return, but with his status in doubt he's not worth drafting in the majority of leagues. Keep an eye on his health once the season starts, and he might be a late waiver-wire addition as the eventual handcuff for Richardson.

Erik Lorig, Buccaneers

Erik Lorig is expected to continue on as a fullback for the Bucs, blocking for the team's running backs. With 12 catches last season and not many more expected this year, Fantasy owners are completely wasting their lives reading these words. Go do something else.

Marshawn Lynch, Seahawks

Marshawn Lynch might not have the upside appeal of Doug Martin, Trent Richardson, Jamaal Charles or C.J. Spiller. And he doesn't have the same history as Ray Rice or LeSean McCoy. But after Adrian Peterson and Arian Foster are drafted in standard leagues, you should consider Lynch as the No. 3 overall pick. He's that good since coming to Seattle. In 2012, Lynch had 315 carries for 1,590 yards and 11 touchdowns and 23 catches for 196 yards and a touchdown. He had double digits in Fantasy points in 11 games, including five in a row to close the season. And in two years as the starter for Seattle he has scored 25 total touchdowns with more than 1,400 total yards in each season. If he can avoid a suspension from last year's DUI arrest in July -- the matter has yet to be resolved - then he should be a star. Lynch is definitely a Top 5 overall pick in standard leagues (he's more of a late first-round pick in PPR formats), and if he's guaranteed the chance to play all 16 games then draft him at No. 3 without hesitation.

Bye 5

Owen Marecic, Browns

Owen Marecic didn't post any stats while playing in 10 games with the Browns last year. He'll likely serve as the team's primary fullback this year, a role that will keep his numbers limited. You're wasting your time reading this.

Doug Martin, Buccaneers

It appears Doug Martin will be among the first group of running backs taken in every single draft this summer. Why wouldn't he be? After all his rookie year consisted of 1,926 yards from scrimmage and 12 total touchdowns. That was enough to finish tied for second-best running back in all of the NFL last season with Arian Foster, compiling 12 games with at least 10 Fantasy points. If there's a nitpick it's that a huge chunk of his production came in a two-game span against the Vikings and Raiders, where he had 61 total touches and amassed 486 total yards and half of his total touchdowns on the year. Those two weeks pushed his numbers to enormous heights, but it's not like he didn't have many other big weeks, especially after the Bucs' bye when he had at least 100 total yards in nine of 12 games. You'll find Martin picked between third and eighth overall in all basic standard and PPR leagues this summer.

Ryan Mathews, Chargers

Ryan Mathews enters this season with a lot less hype than he had last year, which is a good thing. Mathews failed in 2012; a broken clavicle in training camp derailed the start of his season and he never regained his form before suffering a second broken clavicle in Week 15. He finished the year with 184 carries for 707 yards (3.8 yards per carry) and one touchdown and 39 catches for 252 yards, numbers that pale to his 2011 totals. But Mathews has gotten the wake-up call this summer, playing tougher in the preseason and seemingly far in the lead for playing time at running back even though the Chargers signed Danny Woodhead this summer. With the running back position thin after the studs at the top, Mathews sizes up as a medium-risk, high-reward Fantasy option worth a pick as soon as late Round 4 in deeper leagues and Round 5 in basic Fantasy formats.

Le'Ron McClain, Chargers

Le'Ron McClain is the fullback for the Chargers and has minimal Fantasy value. In 2012, his first in San Diego, he had just 14 carries for 42 yards and eight catches for 29 yards. He hasn't been a factor for Fantasy owners since 2008 when he had over 1,000 total yards and 11 touchdowns for the Ravens, so ignore him on Draft Day in the majority of leagues.

Bye 10

Bye 5

Bye 8

Bye 8

LeSean McCoy, Eagles

LeSean McCoy might be under-appreciated by Fantasy owners this season after what seemed like a bad year in 2012. He missed four games with a concussion and went from 20 total touchdowns in 2011 to just five. He also failed to reach 1,500 total yards (he had 1,200) for the first time since 2009. But despite his struggles, McCoy still had double digits in Fantasy points in 10 of his 12 outings. He still remains the starter (don't worry about Bryce Brown taking his job), and new coach Chip Kelly will lean on him. And even if he comes off the field for Brown at times, it's not like this is a 50-50 split. McCoy will continue to do the heavy lifting for this offense, and Kelly is fond of running the ball from his days at Oregon. We definitely recommend drafting McCoy in Round 1, and he should be considered a Top 10 overall pick. Brown is worth a late-round selection as a handcuff, but figure McCoy to be around 1,500 total yards again with the chance for double digits in touchdowns and close to 50 catches. He's an elite Fantasy option, and he will regain his form this year.

Darren McFadden, Raiders

There are two things we hope for with Darren McFadden this season. The first is health. The second is an improved offensive system in Oakland. He missed four games in 2012 with an ankle injury, and will now try to stay healthy for the first time in his career (he's never played more than 13 games). Last year he also struggled with Oakland's zone-blocking scheme. He had a career-low 3.3 yards per carry and finished with 216 carries for 707 yards and two touchdowns and 42 catches for 258 yards and one touchdown. It was a miserable year, but the zone-blocking system is gone with Greg Olson replacing Greg Knapp as the offensive coordinator. We still have optimism for McFadden, but there are obvious red flags. Because of that he should only be drafted with a late-second round pick at the earliest. Your best bet is to get McFadden in the third round and hope he surprises you like he did in 2010 (1,600 total yards and 10 touchdowns). We'd all take that McFadden, and we hope he shows up this year.

Willis McGahee, Free Agent

Willis McGahee is looking for a job after the Broncos released him in mid-June. The writing was on the wall for McGahee after the Broncos drafted rookie running back Montee Ball in the second round of April's draft. McGahee had a rough year in 2012 since his season ended in Week 11 with a broken right leg. Prior to getting hurt, McGahee had 167 carries for 731 yards and four touchdowns and 26 catches for 221 yards. He was on pace to shatter his previous high for receiving yards (231 set in 2007), and he had at least eight Fantasy points in five of the nine full games he appeared in. He'll probably get picked up by a new team where he'll work in tandem with another back but Fantasy owners shouldn't take him with anything more than a late-round pick.

Corey McIntyre, Free Agent

Corey McIntyre is a free agent this offseason, but he will have minimal Fantasy value no matter where he ends up. He's more of a blocker than anything else, and in 2012 he had one catch for 9 yards and no carries. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 12

Joe McKnight, Jets

Joe McKnight will remain a reserve running back for the Jets and will likely be No. 4 on the depth chart at best behind Chris Ivory, Bilal Powell and Mike Goodson. That's a best-case scenario for McKnight this year. McKnight had a rough year in 2012 when he spent time at cornerback just to get playing time. Keep an eye on what happens this offseason, but McKnight is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Rashard Mendenhall, Cardinals

Rashard Mendenhall is reunited with former coordinator Bruce Arians in Arizona, where he'll battle for the starting job in training camp this summer. Coming off a torn ACL injury in 2012, Mendenhall slogged through a miserable season where he averaged 3.6 yards per carry, caught his lone touchdown of the year and missed 10 games with a number of ailments. Arians has said his preference is not to split rushing duties between multiple backs, so it is believed Mendenhall will battle Ryan Williams and potentially rookies Steffan Taylor and Andre Ellington for the starting job in Arizona. All Mendenhall has to do is prove he's healthy and capable of handling a heavy workload in training camp and the job should be his. Problem is, the Cardinals' offense is in a rebuilding mode, so the going won't be any easier for Mendenhall, who will be only 26 years old when the season starts. He's worth a roll of the dice as a No. 3 running back with a pick in Round 7, and he could prove great dividends if he rebounds after being reunited with Arians.

Christine Michael, Seahawks

The Seahawks drafted running back Christine Michael in the second round of the NFL Draft from Texas A&M. Michael is expected to be the No. 3 running back in Seattle behind Marshawn Lynch and Robert Turbin. Barring an injury or suspension to Lynch and/or Turbin, we don't expect to see Michael on the field much this year. He does have some long-term potential if the Seahawks part ways with Lynch down the road, but Michael should not be drafted in most seasonal leagues. In rookie-only formats, Michael is worth a late-round selection.

Bruce Miller, 49ers

Bruce Miller is the starting fullback for the 49ers, but he has minimal Fantasy value because he barely touches the ball on offense. He has 32 total touches the past two years (nine carries and 23 catches), and he scored one touchdown over that span. Ignore him in the majority of leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 10

Bye 9

Bye 12

Bye 9

Lamar Miller, Dolphins

Lamar Miller had an unimpressive rookie season playing behind Reggie Bush and Daniel Thomas. He finished 2012 with 51 carries for 250 yards and one touchdown and six catches for 45 yards. But in 2013, Miller has the chance to showcase his skills. Bush is gone as a free agent to Detroit, and Miller has moved past Thomas on the depth chart. If a veteran rusher isn't brought in, then Miller could open the season as the starter, which will enhance his Fantasy value. We consider Miller a low-end No. 2 Fantasy running back with upside, and he's worth drafting with a pick as early as Round 4. He should be on most sleeper lists, and the Dolphins are in love with Miller's playmaking ability. He could end up as a quality Fantasy option if he opens the season as the starter as expected.

Devin Moore, Lions

Devin Moore will battle for a spot along the Lions' depth chart in camp this summer but he's not expected to leapfrog the likes of Mikel Leshoure and Joique Bell. We'd be shocked if Moore had a significant impact in Fantasy leagues this season.

Mewelde Moore, Free Agent

Mewelde Moore will battle for a spot on a running back depth chart somewhere this summer. He's not expected to be a worthwhile Fantasy option. We wouldn't draft him.

Knowshon Moreno, Broncos

Knowshon Moreno was a standout Fantasy option for owners in the playoffs in 2012, but that might not be enough to guarantee him a big role this year. Moreno suffered a knee injury in a playoff loss to Baltimore last season and needed offseason surgery, but he's still in the mix this summer. Finding playing time will be tough; the Broncos drafted Montee Ball in the second round of the NFL Draft, and they still have Ronnie Hillman. Moreno might not be needed even though he did an admirable job for Denver down the stretch last year in place of the injured McGahee with double digits in Fantasy points in five of the final six regular-season games. Keep in mind that prior to those outings -- when he had at least 20 carries in five games -- that he was considered a healthy scratch from Week 2 until Week 12. Keep an eye on where Moreno ends up. If he stays with the Broncos he would have minimal Fantasy value.

Alfred Morris, Redskins

Alfred Morris came out of nowhere to be a star as a rookie in 2012, and now he has to avoid a sophomore slump this year. He had a tremendous year last season with 335 carries for 1,613 yards and 13 touchdowns and 11 catches for 77 yards. Morris was the No. 5 running back in standard leagues, and he had 12 games with double digits in Fantasy points, including six games in a row to close the season. Coach Mike Shanahan has said Morris could be more involved in the passing game this year, which would only enhance his value, but he'll be a quality option in standard leagues no matter what. He's a workhorse and a goal-line back with talent, and we know Shanahan has a great history with running backs. We expect Morris to play well again this year, and he should be drafted toward the end of Round 1 in standard leagues and Round 2 in PPR formats.

Bye 6

Richard Murphy, Jaguars

Richard Murphy will battle for spot along the Jaguars' depth chart in training camp this summer. With minimal work expected to come his way, Fantasy owners shouldn't draft him.

Bye 9

DeMarco Murray, Cowboys

DeMarco Murray can be an elite Fantasy talent when healthy, but health has been a big issue for him through two seasons. He's already missed nine games in his career because of injuries, and Fantasy owners are frustrated. It doesn't help matters that in May he battled a hamstring injury that kept him out of offseason workouts, but he should be ready to go for the start of this year. And we hope he can put together a full season of quality outings. In 2012, Murray appeared in just 10 games. He had at least seven Fantasy points in every outing with double-digit points in five games, so he's capable of being a big point producer. But he has to stay on the field to live up to the hype. Based on talent, Murray is a first-round pick, but we would let him fall to Round 2 at the earliest. He should be considered at least a Top 15 Fantasy running back, and if he can play 16 games we could be looking at a Top 10 option in all leagues.

Bye 11

Latavius Murray, Raiders

The Raiders drafted rookie running back Latavius Murray in the sixth round this year from Central Florida, and he's expected to compete for a role behind starter Darren McFadden. Murray will likely battle Rashad Jennings and fullback Marcel Reece for backup duties, which could be a prominent role given McFadden's injury history. Keep an eye on Murray during training camp, and he could be worth a late-round flier in seasonal leagues. In rookie-only drafts, plan on drafting Murray with a mid-round pick.

Bye 7

Chris Ogbonnaya, Browns

Chris Ogbonnaya is entering a contract year but will likely see minimal touches behind starter Trent Richardson. Expect him to battle Montario Hardesty in training camp for the backup role. We think Hardesty is the better backup to Richardson, so don't consider Ogbonnaya.

Bye 10

Jamize Olawale, Raiders

Jamize Olawale will compete for a role in Oakland this season, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve running back. Even if he makes the final roster he would not be worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Bye 7

Montell Owens, Lions

Montell Owens was signed by the Lions in May after he was released by the Jaguars earlier in the month. If he makes the final roster he will see time on special teams with minimal touches on offense. Keep an eye on his role during training camp, but he's not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Isaiah Pead, Rams

Isaiah Pead has a lot to prove to the Rams and Fantasy owners after a disappointing rookie year. In 2012, Pead was a bust with 10 carries for 54 yards and three catches for 16 yards. He was outplayed by Daryl Richardson, who had 98 carries for 475 yards and 24 catches for 163 yards. This season, Pead is expected to compete with Richardson and rookie Zac Stacy for the starting job with Steven Jackson gone, but Pead has a long way to go. He admitted to not knowing the playbook as a rookie, and then he got suspended for Week 1 for violating the NFL Policy and Program for Substances of Abuse. He could still end up being the starter for the majority of the season, but he would have to be given that nod securely in training camp for Fantasy owners to count on him. He is only worth drafting with a late-round pick heading into training camp this year.

Bye 11

William Powell, Cardinals

William Powell will compete for a roster spot with the Cardinals this season as a reserve running back. Even if he makes the final roster he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in the majority of leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 9

Chris Pressley, Bengals

Chris Pressley might serve as the Bengals' primary fullback in 2013. However, he has produced minimal stats over the course of his career and is likely to keep doing so. Keep him off of Fantasy rosters.

Bye 12

Bobby Rainey, Ravens

Bobby Rainey will battle for a spot along the running back depth chart in camp with the Ravens this summer. He's a long shot to produce decent stats, so keep him off of standard rosters.

Bye 8

Cedric Peerman, Bengals

Cedric Peerman is expected to battle for playing time behind starter BenJarvus Green-Ellis in training camp this summer. He did take on a backup role for a chunk of last season, averaging 7.2 yards per carry over 36 attempts, but until he's in a role where his workload is consistent Fantasy owners shouldn't touch him. That might change once we see what he's doing in training camp and preseason games.

Bye 12

Chris Rainey, Free Agent

Chris Rainey is a man without a team after the Steelers cut him following an incident where he was charged with simple battery. Until he signs somewhere and posts enough Fantasy points to matter, he shouldn't be near anyone's team.

Adrian Peterson, Vikings

Fantasy owners should expect Adrian Peterson to be the first player taken in pretty much every draft this summer. And after totaling 2,421 yards and 13 touchdowns over 16 regular-season games and a postseason matchup at Green Bay, why shouldn't he be? Coming off a torn ACL, Peterson regained his form as a dominant rusher capable of rumbling for over 120 yards on the ground per week, which he did in half of his regular-season games. He's got a hammerlock on the amount of work he'll get from week to week (he had under 20 touches three times last season) and will run behind a solid offensive line. Though there's a smidge of concern Peterson could exhaust himself after taking on 370 carries over 17 games last year the reality is that he's too good a player to pass up taking if made available on Draft Day. Owners shouldn't hesitate to take him with the first overall pick.

Bye 5

Joseph Randle, Cowboys

Fantasy owners now have their handcuff option for DeMarco Murray, who has struggled to stay healthy in his first two years. Joseph Randle was drafted in the fifth round from Oklahoma State in the NFL Draft, and he is expected to back up Murray. First he has to outplay Lance Dunbar and Phillip Tanner, but it appears like Randle will win the job. He could get some early down work in tandem with Murray, but Randle is more of a No. 2 option, who might work on third downs. He's worth a late-round pick in seasonal leagues and a mid-round pick in rookie-only formats. Randle rushed for 1,417 yards and 14 touchdowns last season and 1,216 yards and 24 touchdowns in 2011.

Bye 11

Chris Polk, Eagles

Chris Polk will try to earn a roster spot with the Eagles this season, but he has minimal Fantasy value even if he makes the team as a backup running back. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 12

Isaac Redman, Steelers

Isaac Redman will battle for playing time in training camp but not much of it should be there after the Steelers added rookie runner Le'Veon Bell in April. Bell figures to be the primary workhorse for the Steelers this year and that could include some third-down work. Last year Redman was given every opportunity to be the team's primary back but injuries slowed him down. In total he averaged 3.7 yards over 110 carries but was more impressive on limited receptions out of the backfield (19 catches with a 12.8 yard average). Redman has slimmed down this offseason but unless an opportunity opens up for Redman, you shouldn't look at him as anything more than a low-end reserve worth a late-round pick in deeper PPR formats.

Bye 5

Bilal Powell, Jets

Bilal Powell went from a potential starter for the Jets to the backup behind Chris Ivory, who was added this offseason. Powell played well in 2012, and he could see an increased role this year with Ivory an injury risk. After a slow start last year, Powell closed the season with double digits in Fantasy points in three of his final seven games with four touchdowns over that span. He finished the season with 110 carries for 437 yards and four touchdowns and 17 catches for 140 yards. Ivory remains the Jets running back to target, but put Powell on your radar with a late-round pick in all leagues. Should Ivory go down, which has happened before, we could see Powell get a chance to be the starter for the Jets.

Marcel Reece, Raiders

Marcel Reece scored one touchdown in 2012, but for a four-week stretch he was a must-start Fantasy option. Reece was the de facto No. 2 running back for the Raiders when Mike Goodson and Taiwan Jones couldn't handle the backup job behind Darren McFadden. When McFadden went down with an ankle injury, Reece stepped up starting in Week 9 against Tampa Bay and averaged 13 Fantasy points in a standard league in four games against the Bucs, Ravens, Saints and Bengals. He wasn't as successful when McFadden was healthy, but he finished the season with 59 carries for 271 yards and 52 catches for 496 yards and a touchdown. Reece will likely share touches with Rashad Jennings if something happens to McFadden, and he's worth a late-round pick in all leagues. McFadden has never played a full season in his career, and it's clear Reece is a solid replacement option in all formats, especially PPR leagues.

Darius Reynaud, Titans

Darius Reynaud will vie for a spot along the Titans' running back depth chart in training camp while also working as a kick returner this summer. Unless he lands regular playing time, Fantasy owners shouldn't have to worry about him. Leave him off rosters.

Chase Reynolds, Rams

Chase Reynolds will compete for a roster spot this year as a reserve running back for the Rams. Even if he makes the final roster, he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Ray Rice, Ravens

Ray Rice should be in the conversation as a Top-10 pick, but not necessarily a Top-5 pick. True, he had another excellent season in 2012 when he totaled over 1,500 yards and 10 touchdowns and scored double-digit Fantasy points in 11 games. But toward the end of last year we saw Rice split reps with Bernard Pierce, so there's a little concern they could share a little more than we're used to seeing in 2013. Rice also didn't produce the huge numbers he did before the Ravens made a coordinator change as Joe Flacco sort of took over the direction of the offense. We wouldn't be as worried about those things as we would a hangover from the Super Bowl -- running backs tend to struggle posting big numbers in the season following a title game run. Rice had 331 carries and 69 catches over 20 games, which is a lot of work but nothing to get completely alarmed about (he had 411 total touches in 2010 and was fine in 2011). Roster shakeups due to injuries or salary cap issues have thinned out the talent Flacco will throw to as well, so there could be added emphasis on the run game week after week. Is he still one of the best players in Fantasy? Sure, but he's got a lot more company at the top of the running back heap than he did a year ago. We'd aim for Rice no higher than sixth overall in drafts.

Bye 7

Daryl Richardson, Rams

The Rams have a new backfield this season with Steven Jackson gone, and three running backs are expected to handle the load in Daryl Richardson, Isaiah Pead and rookie Zac Stacy. Based on last year, Richardson would appear to have the inside track for the season, and he was named the starter in training camp for at least Week 1. In 2012, Richardson's rookie season, he was the No. 2 running back in St. Louis with 98 carries for 475 yards and 24 catches for 163 yards. Even if Richardson loses rushing-down duties to Pead, who is suspended Week 1, and/or Stacy he will still have a prominent role all year. Consider Richardson with a pick around Round 5 or 6 in all leagues, with his value slightly higher in PPR formats.

Trent Richardson, Browns

Despite a rookie season that saw him total 1,317 yards and 12 touchdowns, Trent Richardson isn't everyone's favorite young running back this summer. Richardson's history of injuries -- from knee issues in high school and college to fractured ribs as a rookie to a right shin issue this offseason -- have made Fantasy owners nervous about taking him. But the proof is in the production: Richardson never missed more than three games in a season in college and only missed one contest last year (he did have under 10 carries in two of the 15 games he played). He also had 10-plus Fantasy points in 11 of 15 games in 2012. Assuming he appears at training camp without limitations he should be a heavy volume workhorse for the Browns as they transition to an offense led by new head coach Rob Chudzinski and offensive coordinator Norv Turner. Despite some problems in San Diego last season, Turner specifically has done a great job converting young running backs into excellent stat producers. With an eye on improving his 3.6 rushing average and playing a full season, Richardson should deliver some excellent numbers in 2013. Count on him as a pick between fifth and eighth overall in drafts.

Theo Riddick, Lions

The Lions selected Notre Dame running back Theo Riddick in April's draft. Riddick's a tough runner with a productive pedigree in college but one without the strength to break tackles or pass protect, making him a project-type player for the Lions. He'll be buried on the depth chart this season and might struggle to make way to the field in following years. Riddick's only worth a late-round look in rookie-only drafts.

Stevan Ridley, Patriots

Bye 10

Stevan Ridley, as expected, had a career year in 2012 as the starter for the Patriots. He should continue to run well this year, and he has the potential to be a low-end No. 1 running back in standard leagues. Ridley dominated carries for New England with 290 for 1,263 yards and 12 touchdowns during the regular season. Compare that to Danny Woodhead (76 carries) and Shane Vereen (62), and you'll see how much coach Bill Belichick relied on Ridley. Now, that doesn't mean Ridley is cemented in as the featured option. Along with Brandon Bolden and potentially LeGarrette Blount and Leon Washington, the Patriots will use all their running backs this year. And Ridley is useless as a receiver with just seven catches in 2012. But he did manage nine games with double digits in Fantasy points, and the Patriots will continue to give him chances to shine. We like Ridley as at least a Top 15 Fantasy running back, and he should be drafted by Round 2 in all standard leagues and no later than Round 3 in PPR formats.

Javon Ringer, Free Agent

Javon Ringer is looking for a gig after spending most of 2012 on injured reserve with a knee injury. He also has concussion issues. Until he signs somewhere, Fantasy owners should forget about him.

Michael Robinson, Seahawks

Bye 12

Michael Robinson is the fullback for the Seahawks, which means he is valuable to Marshawn Lynch owners for his ability to open holes, but he doesn't produce many stats. He had 12 carries for 49 yards and 13 catches for 126 yards and two touchdowns in 2012, and he will likely be limited in his production again this year. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Jacquizz Rodgers, Falcons

Bye 6

Jacquizz Rodgers is hoping to improve on his career-best 2012 season in Atlanta in 2013 but the arrival of Steven Jackson stifles that. It could be a good thing -- Rodgers picked up 362 yards on 94 carries (3.9 avg.) and 402 yards on 53 catches (7.6 avg.) with a touchdown run and catch while working behind Michael Turner last year, who hogged 10 rushing touchdowns. Had Rodgers performed better in his limited work he'd probably contend for more work this season, but it's not as likely after not showing the explosiveness many believed he had (only two runs and two catches were good for 20-plus yards: Turner had six such plays and Jackson had eight). A fair expectation is for Rodgers to remain in a part-time role as a passing downs back for the Falcons. It's possible his job expands but don't hang your hat on it. Jacquizz is worth a pick in Round 9 or 10 in standard drafts and more of a Round 8 or 9 choice in PPR formats.

Evan Rodriguez, Dolphins

Bye 6

Evan Rodriguez will battle for a spot on the Dolphins roster after getting arrested twice this offseason and getting cut by the Bears. The former Temple Owl caught only four passes last season but has a good size/speed combo to make his coaches consider him for a larger role. That being said he might only get in the mix for a target or two per week at best. Until Rodriguez proves he's a bigger part of the Dolphins offense Fantasy owners shouldn't add him to rosters.

Evan Royster, Redskins

Bye 5

Evan Royster will compete with Roy Helu to be the No. 2 running back for the Redskins behind Alfred Morris. As long as Morris is healthy, we don't expect much from Royster, but if Morris goes down then he could have a prominent role. Royster didn't do much in his second year in 2012 with 23 carries for 88 yards and two touchdowns and 15 catches for 109 yards. And that was with Helu out of the way for most of the season. With Helu back, Royster's production will be even more limited. Ignore him in the majority of leagues on Draft Day.

Brandon Saine, Packers

Bye 4

Brandon Saine is slated to battle for a spot on the Packers' depth chart this summer. But because he's not expected to begin the season as the starter, Fantasy owners shouldn't consider him for a roster spot.

Bernard Scott, Bengals

Bye 12

Bernard Scott will return to the Bengals after testing free agency but he has an uphill fight for a roster spot. The team drafted Giovani Bernard to essentially do what Scott was doing (albeit not productively). Coming off a torn ACL and with no reps promised Scott shouldn't be a part of Fantasy rosters.

Da'Rel Scott, Giants

Bye 9

Da'Rel Scott will have a chance to earn some significant reps following the late-August injury to Andre Brown. Scott has a lot to prove though -- in two years he's appeared in just 15 games and has 11 carries for 25 yards and two catches for 13 yards. He's known more for his special-teams work than anything else. We'd gamble on rookie Michael Cox making an impact before Scott, but neither guy is worth anything more than a late pick in deeper leagues.

Anthony Sherman, Chiefs

Bye 10

Anthony Sherman was traded from Arizona to Kansas City this offseason in exchange for cornerback Javier Arenas. Sherman will serve as a blocker and play on special teams for the Chiefs. Since he doesn't touch the ball much he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in the majority of leagues on Draft Day.

Steve Slaton, Free Agent

Steve Slaton will look for a job this offseason after not playing at all in 2012. His last carry was with the Dolphins in 2011, and Slaton is a long way removed from his standout rookie season in 2008 when he had more than 1,600 total yards and 10 touchdowns. Keep an eye on Slaton to see if he signs somewhere as a reserve, but he's not expected to produce much barring an injury. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Alfonso Smith, Cardinals

Bye 9

Alfonso Smith will compete for a roster spot with the Cardinals this season as a reserve running back. Even if he makes the final roster he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in the majority of leagues on Draft Day.

Antone Smith, Falcons

Antone Smith is expected to battle for a spot along the team's depth chart this summer, assuming he returns to the team. He's slated to be a restricted free agent. He's not expected to have a significant role in the offense and as such shouldn't be on any Fantasy rosters.

Armond Smith, Panthers

Armond Smith will likely settle in as a backup rusher on the Panthers' depth chart this summer. He's a long shot to play meaningful minutes and cannot be counted on for Fantasy use.

Kevin Smith, Free Agent

Kevin Smith is looking for a new home this offseason after bottoming out with the Lions in 2012. He began the year as their starter by default and did well, but the coaching staff opted to go with Mikel Leshoure and Joique Bell for the rest of the season. As such, Smith had eight carries in his final 14 games after landing 29 in his first two. Smith has some value as a pass catcher and his work ethic is pretty darn good considering how many times he's come back from being either hurt or ignored. But until he's in a role where he'll clinch some decent work, Fantasy owners shouldn't trust him.

Michael Smith, Buccaneers

Second-year back Michael Smith is an interesting guy to watch this summer if you play in deep dynasty/keeper leagues. There was some momentum building up for him after the draft as a possible backup to Doug Martin. That didn't happen, but he'll compete for a spot on the depth chart in camp this summer. He's got some decent ability and might be worth the late investment in those long-term formats that rely on finding diamonds in the rough.

Jason Snelling, Falcons

Jason Snelling has settled in as a reserve running back for the Falcons, a role he should continue to have in 2013 behind Steven Jackson and Jacquizz Rodgers. He had just 18 carries and 31 catches last year in a reserve role. We wouldn't count on Snelling being a factor in Fantasy at this point.

C.J. Spiller, Bills

C.J. Spiller has the ability to be the No. 1 running back in Fantasy leagues in 2013. This should be his first year as a full-time starter. Fred Jackson is expected to poach carries, but Spiller will be given a heavy workload. He took on a lot of work in 2012 with Jackson dealing with a knee injury and set career highs in carries (207), rushing yards (1,244), touchdowns (six), catches (43) and receiving yards (459), and that was in just nine starts. Spiller averaged 6.0 yards per carry, so imagine what he could do with close to 300 total touches. He has 2,000 total-yard potential with double digits in touchdowns, and we see Spiller as a top 10 overall pick with a chance to be a top-5 selection. This is going to be a big year for Spiller.

Bye 6

Darren Sproles, Saints

If you draft Darren Sproles in 2013, you're banking on him coming through as a pass catcher rather than as a rusher. Sproles' run duties did little to supplement what he did as a receiver, which was actually slightly better on a per-game basis than what he did in 2011. His catches per game went up from 5.4 to 5.8, his receiving average jumped from 8.3 yards to 8.9 yards per catch and his receiving touchdowns stayed at seven. But his rush game, despite a nifty 5.1 yard average, practically disappeared. He had all of 48 carries thanks to four games of no handoffs and seven with five or fewer. That makes Sproles a risk as a top-20 running back but not quite as a low-end No. 2 option in a standard league. Obviously, the receptions he's expected to handle push him up in PPR formats to a very solid No. 2 option. He's worth a late fourth-round pick in standard leagues and a third-round pick in PPR formats this summer.

Zac Stacy, Rams

The Rams drafted running back Zac Stacy in the fifth round of the NFL Draft from Vanderbilt, and he has the chance to start in St. Louis this year as the replacement for Steven Jackson. Stacy, who ran for 1,141 yards and 10 touchdowns last year, is 5-foot-8 and 216 pounds. He will compete for the starting job with Isaiah Pead and Daryl Richardson, and we expect Stacy to win that battle. Pead was a bust as a rookie in 2012, and Richardson is more of a change-of-pace rusher and third-down option. If Stacy is No. 1 on the depth chart he should be considered a No. 3 Fantasy running back with upside. We would draft Stacy with a mid-round pick in standard leagues and a first-round pick in rookie-only formats. He has the chance to be this year's Alfred Morris as a late-round pick in the NFL Draft who emerges as a solid Fantasy option.

James Starks, Packers

James Starks will battle for a spot along the depth chart with the Packers in camp this summer. He's had opportunities to play a significant role in the offense before but injuries and slow running have kept him from being a Fantasy factor. Now the Packers have all but cemented his future by drafting Eddie Lacy and Johnathan Franklin. We wouldn't draft Starks.

LaRod Stephens-Howling, Steelers

LaRod Stephens-Howling signed with the Steelers this offseason where he's expected to work on special teams and possibly third downs. Stephens-Howling had a career year in 2012 with a career high in carries (111), yards (357), touchdowns (four) and catches (17). He ended up on a team with a crowded backfield, including rookie Le'Veon Bell, Jonathan Dwyer and Isaac Redman. Stephens-Howling could work in passing situations, but we're not expecting much production. Ignore him in most leagues on Draft Day.

Jonathan Stewart, Panthers

After scoring 10 rushing touchdowns in each of his first two seasons in the league, Jonathan Stewart has 10 total touchdowns (seven rushing) over his past three years. Though injuries are to blame for part of the decline his rushing average plummeted right along with his carries in 2012 as he had 3.6 yards per tote on 93 carries in nine games. And he's had 15 or more touches four times in his past two seasons - this is for a player who received a monster contract extension last offseason. While Stewart's financial outlook is great, his Fantasy outlook isn't. Assuming the Panthers keep him in a backfield with two other running backs and a quarterback who steals goal-line touchdowns, Stewart's upside just isn't very good. Throw in a surgically repaired ankle and you have a running back who probably shouldn't be targeted until at least Round 7 when the position starts to get really thin. This all changes if the Panthers end up thinning out their running back corps, and Stewart has proven to be a great, versatile player when given the opportunity, but with only limited for the past two seasons there's no telling when he'll be productive for Fantasy purposes. Think of him as a quality reserve for now.

Phillip Tanner, Cowboys

Phillip Tanner has the chance to be the No. 2 running back for the Cowboys this year behind DeMarco Murray. That could be an important role given Murray's injury history (he's missed nine games the past two years). Tanner will compete with Lance Dunbar and rookie Joseph Randle for the backup job, and whoever wins is worth a late-round pick, especially if you invest in Murray with an early-round selection (our choice for the job is Randle). Tanner did not play well in 2012 with 25 carries for 61 yards and four catches for 41 yards, but his touches could increase this year.

Ben Tate, Texans

If you drafted Arian Foster with an early round pick, getting Ben Tate is a must. But even if you didn't draft Foster there's some potential in Tate even though he didn't do much last season. Foster is a risk for breaking down after totaling more than 400 carries (and 450 touches) through 18 games in 2012. Foster also strained his calf in a late May practice. So if something happens to him, Tate could step in and put up numbers just as he did in 2011. The fourth-year back is still averaging a nice number on his runs and making some moves as a receiver. But if given the chance this season Tate can show the rest of the league why he's worth a large contract when he's a free agent in the spring of 2014. If you draft Foster, Tate is a must with a pick in late Round 7 or early Round 8. If you don't draft Foster, getting him in Round 8 or 9 as a sleeper could also pay off.

Bye 4Stepfan Taylor, Cardinals

The Cardinals drafted running back Stepfan Taylor in the fifth round of the NFL Draft out of Stanford. He is expected to be No. 3 on the depth chart behind Rashard Mendenhall and Ryan Williams, but Taylor could compete with fellow rookie Andre Ellington for playing time. Both running backs could also be the running back duo of the future for the Cardinals. We don't recommend drafting Taylor in the majority of standard leagues, but he is worth a late-round flier in rookie-only formats.

Bye 9Marcus Thigpen, Dolphins

Marcus Thigpen will compete for a roster spot with the Dolphins in 2013, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve running back. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 6Daniel Thomas, Dolphins

Daniel Thomas has a lot to prove this season, and he could have the chance to be a significant contributor for the Dolphins in 2013 with Reggie Bush gone. The Dolphins appear to be going with Lamar Miller as the starter, but Thomas could also play a big role unless he gets passed on the depth chart by rookie Mike Gilleslee. The coaching staff wants to see more from Thomas, who had some positive moments in his sophomore campaign in 2012, but still has flaws in his game. He had three games with double digits in Fantasy points, but injuries kept him from playing at a consistent level. Thomas missed time with multiple ailments, including knee surgery after the season, which was minor. He finished the year with 91 carries for 325 yards and four touchdowns and 15 catches for 156 yards. He is worth a late-round flier in all formats if he opens the season behind Miller as expected. If he somehow overtakes Miller on the depth chart then his value will rise, but we only consider Thomas as a reserve option heading into training camp.

Bye 6Pierre Thomas, Saints

There's going to come a time in your draft where taking Pierre Thomas seems like a good idea. It'll probably be around Round 9 or so, when the rest of the running backs left look like total garbage. Thomas has proven to be a versatile runner, but his production tanked in 2012 when he scored just two touchdowns and totaled 827 yards before landing on injured reserve. He posted 10 or more touches in eight games, proof that's he's involved, but really the only way Thomas will be huge for Fantasy is if injuries clear the way for him to be a primary back for the Saints. Consider other running backs when you're in Round 9 and eye-balling Thomas - he's a better late-round flier than mid- to late-round gamble.

Bye 7Chris Thompson, Redskins

The Redskins drafted running back Chris Thompson from Florida State in the fifth round, and he will compete for a role this season as part of a crowded backfield. Keep an eye on his progress in training camp, but we don't expect much from Thompson this season. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

RUNNING BACKS (CONT.)

Mike Tolbert, Panthers

Mike Tolbert could become a quality player in Fantasy but it will take some roster changes on the Panthers for it to happen. Tolbert did score seven rushing touchdowns in 2012 (more than Jonathan Stewart and DeAngelo Williams) but five came in the final three weeks of the season weeks when Stewart was on injured reserve. Tolbert also amassed just 451 yards from scrimmage on 81 touches over 16 games. The guy has a nose for the end zone and is fun to watch but would only be worth a late pick on Draft Day if the Panthers send one of their other running backs packing.

Ryan Torain, Giants

Ryan Torain will enter training camp with the Giants and hopefully make the final roster. He ended 2012 with the Giants but did not get into a game. Torain once showed promise with the Redskins in 2010, but knee injuries have plagued him throughout his career. Even if he does make the team he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Robert Turbin, Seahawks

Robert Turbin is the No. 2 running back for the Seahawks and the handcuff option for Marshawn Lynch. In 2012, Turbin's rookie year, he had 80 carries for 354 yards and 19 catches for 181 yards. He wasn't needed with Lynch handling most of the load. This year, the Seahawks might give Turbin more work, but he won't be Fantasy relevant in all formats unless Lynch misses significant time. Still, Turbin is worth a late-round pick in all leagues, especially if you draft Lynch in Round 1. If Lynch goes down then Turbin could become a star.

Michael Turner, Free Agent

The Falcons' relationship with Michael Turner went from good to tolerant to non-existent, leaving the veteran without a team. Turner was released in a salary-cap purge in early March and is looking for work after posting his worst year out of five in Atlanta. Under the promise of getting less of a workload in 2012, Turner averaged just under 14 carries per game and paired it with a career-worst 3.6 rushing average, finishing with an even 800 yards. But that was offset by another season with 10 rushing touchdowns (his fifth straight) along with a prolific receiving year, at least by his standards (19 catches for 128 yards and a touchdown). Turner had at least 10 Fantasy points in half of his games thanks to those touchdowns, but even that modest production is tough to expect with a new team in 2013. We're sure he'll play somewhere this season but he could have even fewer carries. Consider him a reserve rusher with a middle- to late-round pick.

Josh Vaughan, Falcons

Josh Vaughan is expected to battle for a spot along the team's depth chart this summer. He's not expected to have a significant role in the offense and as such shouldn't be on any Fantasy rosters.

Bye 4

Shane Vereen, Patriots

Shane Vereen should be considered a sleeper coming into this season based on his expected role with the Patriots with Danny Woodhead gone. Last year, Vereen was inactive for the first three games of the season, but he finished the year with 73 carries for 308 yards and four touchdowns and 15 catches for 254 yards and three touchdowns, including the playoffs. With Woodhead gone, Vereen's value will rise, especially in PPR leagues where he could complement Stevan Ridley. Woodhead had 76 carries for 301 yards and four touchdowns and 40 catches for 446 yards and three touchdowns with one lost fumble last year, and Vereen should pick up the majority of that production. He should be considered a No. 3 Fantasy running back in standard leagues and a potential No. 2 option in deep PPR formats. He's worth a mid-round pick, and Vereen has breakout written all over him.

Lawrence Vickers, Cowboys

Lawrence Vickers is expected to be the blocking back in Dallas this year as the starting fullback. Vickers spent 2012 in the same role, and he barely touched the ball. He had three carries for 11 yards and 13 catches for 104 yards. Vickers won't touch the ball much and has yet to score a rushing touchdown, so he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

D.J. Ware, Free Agent

D.J. Ware was expected to battle for a spot along the Bucs' depth chart before he was cut in early April. He still might be able to work as a third-down back for a team but he hasn't been productive over the course of his career and doesn't warrant any Fantasy interest.

Spencer Ware, Seahawks

The Seahawks drafted running back Spencer Ware in the sixth round of the NFL Draft from LSU. Ware will compete for a roster spot with the Seahawks. Keep an eye on his progress in training camp, but he has minimal Fantasy value if he makes the final roster. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Leon Washington, Patriots

Leon Washington signed with the Patriots this offseason after he was released by the Seahawks. He will likely be a reserve running back and play on special teams. In the same role last season, Washington had 23 carries for 83 yards and a touchdown and four catches for 31 yards. He did contribute in the return game with 41 punt returns for 357 yards and 27 kickoff returns for 784 yards and a touchdown, but his Fantasy value is limited in standard leagues. In formats that reward points for return yardage then Washington is worth a late-round pick, but he's not worth drafting in most standard leagues.

Bye 10

Bye 11

Bye 12

Bye 10

Bye 6

Beanie Wells, Free Agent

Beanie Wells will have to find a new team this season after he was released by the Cardinals in March. He will have to prove he can stay healthy. Wells had a rough year in 2012 due to a variety of leg injuries. He appeared in just eight games and averaged just 2.7 yards per carry, finishing with 88 attempts for 234 yards and five touchdowns. He scored in just two games, getting 16 Fantasy points against the Rams in Week 12 and 24 points against the Lions in Week 15. Aside from those two games, he finished with more than two Fantasy points just once. Wells was a quality Fantasy option in 2011 with 1,097 total yards and 10 touchdowns. He was the No. 15 running back in standard Fantasy leagues, but durability remains an issue for him. Keep an eye on where Wells ends up this season, and hopefully he'll get enough touches to be successful. He should only be drafted with a late-round flier.

Fozzy Whittaker, Chargers

Bye 8

Fozzy Whittaker will compete for a roster spot with the Chargers this season as a reserve running back after he was claimed off waivers from the Cardinals. Even if he makes the final roster he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in the majority of leagues on Draft Day.

DeAngelo Williams, Panthers

Bye 4

For now, the Panthers will have DeAngelo Williams as part of their high-priced stable of running backs. But reports emerged in mid-February that the Panthers could move on from Williams because of his expensive cost and less-than-stellar production. He'll be 30 when the season starts and even though he hasn't put a ton of work on his legs the past couple of seasons it's perceived he isn't the back he once was thanks in part to him getting fewer rushing yards on more carries in 2012. If there's a silver lining with Williams it's that he's totaled 900 yards and scored seven times in each of the last two years. One problem is figuring out when he'll have a big game. He has had 11 contests with at least 10 Fantasy points and 17 with six or fewer over the past two seasons. Changing teams could clear up what kind of a workload he'd have and make him appealing for the 2013 season since he does have some speed left on those legs. But until we know that he's done in Carolina your best move is to draft Williams as a reserve Fantasy rusher with a mid- to late-round pick.

Keiland Williams, Redskins

Bye 5

Keiland Williams will compete for a roster spot for the Redskins this season. Even if he makes the final roster, he has minimal Fantasy value in the majority of leagues. Ignore him in all formats on Draft Day.

Kerwynn Williams, Colts

Bye 8

The Colts selected Utah State running back Kerwynn Williams in April's draft. Williams is very fast but also very small and not very experienced; he might have to earn a role as a return man before contributing on offense. Williams has appeal with a late pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a middle- to late-round pick in rookie-only drafts.

Ryan Williams, Cardinals

Bye 9

Ryan Williams' offseason has gone downhill fast. He started out as the apple of new coach Bruce Arians' eye after Beanie Wells was released. Then the Cardinals signed Rashard Mendenhall and drafted two running backs in Steffan Taylor and Andre Ellington. Then he admitted he played scared in 2012. So not only could Williams not start this season because of Mendenhall, he might not be the running back of the future either because of Taylor and/or Ellington. Still, Williams has the chance to compete for the starting job this year if he can outplay Mendenhall in training camp, and he's worth keeping an eye on. In 2012, Williams finally took the field after sitting out his rookie campaign in 2011 with a knee injury. Williams didn't do much before being lost for the season in Week 5 with a shoulder injury. Prior to getting hurt, Williams had 58 carries for 164 yards (just 2.8 yards per carry) and no touchdowns and seven catches for 44 yards. We've always liked Williams' potential, and we hope this is the year he plays at a high level. He should be considered a late-round flier at best if he's behind Mendenhall as expected and a mid-round pick if he surprises us and wins the job.

David Wilson, Giants

Bye 9

David Wilson has the chance to dominate with the Giants this year following Ahmad Bradshaw's departure and Andre Brown's late August fractured leg. Wilson was drafted in the first round last year out of Virginia Tech but struggled to get on the field at running back most of the season, primarily because of his poor pass blocking. But he improved as the year went on, including a big game in Week 14 against New Orleans when he had 13 carries for 100 yards and two touchdowns. He closed the season with 49 Fantasy points in his final four games, and he should have the chance for a big season, particularly if he picks up the work Brown left behind. Wilson is now worth considering as soon as late Round 2 in drafts.

Danny Woodhead, Patriots

Bye 10

Danny Woodhead has left the friendly confines of New England where the Patriots made him a household name to sign with the Chargers as a free agent. He will now share playing time with Ryan Mathews, but new San Diego coach Mike McCoy has said Woodhead will be used in a similar fashion like he was with the Patriots. Woodhead is coming off a solid campaign in 2012 with 76 carries for 301 yards and four touchdowns and 40 catches for 446 yards and three touchdowns with one lost fumble. He now has at least six total touchdowns in two of the past three seasons, and this is the second time over that span that he's had at least 700 total yards. We don't envision Woodhead being a significant contributor in standard leagues unless he overtakes Mathews for the featured role, but he should be looked at in PPR formats. In leagues where you get points for receptions plan on drafting Woodhead with a late-round pick.

Darrel Young, Redskins

Bye 5

Darrel Young is the starting fullback for the Redskins. He had the same role in 2012 and finished with just 14 carries for 60 yards and eight catches for 109 yards and two touchdowns. He doesn't touch the ball enough to factor for Fantasy owners. Ignore him on Draft Day.

WIDE RECEIVER

Joe Adams, Panthers

All Joe Adams had to show for his rookie season was a 7-yard catch, 13 rush yards on three carries and 334 yards on kick and punt returns. The speedster has some promise to put up some modest numbers but no one in standard formats should invest a late pick in Adams.

Kris Adams, Giants

Kris Adams will compete for a roster spot for the Giants this season as a reserve receiver. Even if he makes the final roster he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all formats on Draft Day.

Royce Adams, Jets

Royce Adams is hoping to make the final roster for the Jets as a reserve wide receiver. Even if he makes the team he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Kamar Aiken, Patriots

Kamar Aiken will compete for a roster spot with the Patriots in 2013, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve receiver. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Seyi Ajirotutu, Chargers

Seyi Ajirotutu is back with the Chargers as a reserve receiver. The Chargers are expected to go with Danario Alexander, Malcom Floyd and Vincent Brown as their Top 3 options, and Robert Meachem and Eddie Royal also remain in the mix along with rookie Keenan Allen. Ajirotutu could play a role on special teams, but his Fantasy value is minimal. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Danario Alexander, Chargers

Danario Alexander might have the worst luck of any player in NFL history. He just can't stay healthy. After having five surgeries on his left knee, Alexander suffered a torn ACL on his right knee during a practice in training camp in early August. He is expected to miss the entire season. Alexander signed a one-year deal with the Chargers in the offseason to remain in San Diego after a brilliant stretch last year when he had 37 catches for 658 yards and seven touchdowns in nine games. Now, his future in the NFL is in doubt. We wouldn't draft Alexander in standard leagues, and he's a low-end option in dynasty formats. We hope the 25-year-old can rebound and play at a high level in the future, but he just has a hard time staying healthy, which could scare off some teams from signing him as a free agent.

Bye 4Bye 9*Bye 10*Bye 10*Bye 8*Bye 8*Keenan Allen, Chargers

Keenan Allen has the chance to be a significant contributor for the Chargers as a rookie, but we view him more as a long-term option. Allen is coming off a knee injury in his final year at Cal, which caused him to fall to the third round of the NFL Draft. He's not going to be asked to do much as a rookie barring an injury in front of him because San Diego has a loaded receiving corps with Danario Alexander, Malcom Floyd and Vincent Brown. We consider Allen the No. 4 option, but Alexander and Floyd might be gone after this season. That could open the door for Allen to step up next year. Still, based on his ability, he could play at a high level right away. Allen finished his Cal career with 205 receptions for 2,570 yards and 17 touchdowns over three seasons. He is worth a late-round flier in seasonal leagues and at least a second-round pick in rookie-only formats.

Danny Amendola, Patriots

Danny Amendola got the dream job this offseason as he signed with the Patriots as a free agent. He is expected to replace the departed Wes Welker, and Amendola should be in line for a huge boost in production if he can stay healthy (he's missed 20 games the past two years). In 2012, Amendola appeared in 11 games and had 63 catches for 666 yards and three touchdowns. He's never been a big scoring threat with three touchdowns his career high, but he is a high-volume receiver with 153 catches in his past 28 games. And clearly the move to play with Tom Brady is a huge upgrade. We consider Amendola a low-end No. 2/high-end No. 3 Fantasy receiver in standard leagues, and he could approach 100 catches as Welker's replacement, making him a potential No. 2 option in PPR formats. Look for Amendola to be drafted in Round 5 in standard leagues and as high as Round 3 in PPR formats.

Emmanuel Arceneaux, Jets

Emmanuel Arceneaux is hoping to make the final roster for the Jets as a reserve wide receiver. Even if he makes the team he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Anthony Armstrong, Cowboys

Anthony Armstrong re-signed with the Cowboys this offseason, and he will look to make the final roster in Dallas as a reserve receiver. He appeared in six games for the Cowboys in 2012 and had three catches for 12 yards. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 8Bye 10*Bye 10*Bye 11

Miles Austin, Cowboys

The perception is Miles Austin's best days are behind him. He's clearly behind Dez Bryant and Jason Witten as the top-two options for Tony Romo in Dallas, the Cowboys made Austin renegotiate his contract to stay in Dallas and he's considered injury prone. But the reality is Austin has played 16 games in three of the past four years and he was the No. 26 Fantasy receiver last year with 66 catches for 943 yards and six touchdowns. He had eight games with double-digit Fantasy points, including six of the first seven games to start the season. Is he a No. 1 or even No. 2 Fantasy option anymore? No, especially with the emergence of Bryant. And yes, he's battled hamstring problems the past two years, which is something to monitor. But if you can snag Austin with a mid-round pick you will probably be in good shape. If he gives you 16 games again he should be a top-30 receiver, and if you consider him a spot starter, injury or bye-week replacement, that's good value for a receiver of his caliber.

Bye 11

Tavon Austin, Rams

The Rams drafted receiver Tavon Austin in the first round of the NFL Draft out of West Virginia, and he's expected to contribute right away. In fact, he might be the best rookie this season since he has the size (5-foot-9) and playmaking skills of Percy Harvin. He has excellent speed (4.29 in the 40-yard dash). Austin posted back-to-back 100-catch seasons with the Mountaineers, totaling over 11 yards per catch along the way while upping his rushing workload as a senior (72 carries for 643 yards including a school-record 344 rush yards against the Oklahoma Sooners). He will likely play in the slot for the Rams, but he also can play outside. Consider Austin a potential No. 3 Fantasy receiver in standard leagues with a mid-round pick (yep, that high), but in rookie-only drafts he's a first-round selection.

Bye 11

Jason Avant, Eagles

Jason Avant returns to the Eagles this season where he will be the No. 3 receiver behind DeSean Jackson and Jeremy Maclin. Avant had a career-best 53 receptions in 2012 to go with 648 yards as Philadelphia's slot receiver. He has at least 50 catches in each of the past three seasons, but he's yet to top 700 receiving yards over that span. He also has just 10 career touchdowns in seven seasons, so he's not worth drafting in most standard leagues. In PPR formats, we can see Avant being taken with a late-round pick. If he continues to see the field a lot in new coach Chip Kelly's offense then he could top 60 catches this season and make for a solid injury or bye-week replacement.

Bye 12

Donnie Avery, Chiefs

Chronic underachiever Donnie Avery put together the best season of his career with the Colts and hopes to replicate it with the Chiefs. Playing on a one-year deal, and perhaps for his career, Avery posted 60 grabs for 781 yards (both career highs) with three touchdowns. He was helped along by playing in a pass-heavy offense that saw him collect 125 targets in the regular season. While that made for a poor percentage of passes caught (48 percent) it proved that he can be a capable receiver, which is what the Chiefs will look for in their new West Coast offense. Avery is worth a late pick as a reserve receiver in standard Fantasy drafts and a middle- to late-round pick in PPR formats as he should come close to last season's totals.

Bye 10

Doug Baldwin, Seahawks

Doug Baldwin went from Seattle's best receiver in 2011 to the No. 4 option in 2012 behind Sidney Rice, Golden Tate and Zach Miller. He finished the year with 29 catches for 366 yard and three touchdowns, which was well below his 2011 stats of 51 catches for 788 yards and four touchdowns. This is Baldwin's third year in the NFL, so we hope he's in line for a breakout, but he won't get the same playing time as he did in 2011 when Seattle was dealing with injuries at receiver, especially with the addition of Percy Harvin. Keep an eye on Baldwin's production, and if he starts out the season playing well then add him off the waiver wire. But he should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Bye 12

Jon Baldwin, Chiefs

Jon Baldwin was traded from the Chiefs to the 49ers in a mid-August move, and it's in San Francisco where he'll try to salvage what's left of his career. Baldwin has been a bust so far but could turn things around in his third season with a change of scenery and improvement in quarterback. Through two years, Baldwin has combined for 41 catches, 579 yards and two touchdowns. That leaves a lot to be desired -- only draft him outside the very deepest of leagues (20-plus rounds).

Bye 10

Brandon Banks, Redskins

Brandon Banks will compete for a roster spot for the Redskins this season as a reserve receiver. Even if he makes the final roster, he has minimal Fantasy value in the majority of leagues. Ignore him in all formats on Draft Day. In 2012, Banks had just eight catches for 15 yards and seven carries for 36 yards.

Bye 5

Ramses Barden, Giants

Ramses Barden re-signed with the Giants in May, and he will compete for playing time this year. Barden spent the past four seasons with the Giants where he had 29 catches for 394 yards and no touchdowns. His best game was Week 3 in 2012 at Carolina when he had nine catches for 138 yards, but we have minimal expectations for Barden. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

WIDE RECEIVER (CONT.)

Phil Bates, Seahawks

Phil Bates will compete for a roster spot with the Seahawks. Keep an eye on his progress in training camp, but he has minimal Fantasy value if he makes the final roster. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Bye 12

Cole Beasley, Cowboys

Cole Beasley could compete to be the slot receiver for the Cowboys this year, but he will likely open the season No. 5 on the depth chart at best behind Dez Bryant, Miles Austin, rookie Terrance Williams and Dwayne Harris. In 2012, Beasley's rookie season, he had just 15 catches for 128 yards. Keep an eye on his role in training camp, but Beasley is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues. If he starts off the season playing well then add him off the waiver wire.

Bye 11

Josh Bellamy, Chiefs

Josh Bellamy will compete for a role in Kansas City's receiving corps and work on special teams. Even if he makes the final roster he would not be worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Bye 10

Tim Benford, Cowboys

Tim Benford will compete for a roster spot with the Cowboys this year but has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day even if he makes the final roster.

Bye 11

Travis Benjamin, Browns

Travis Benjamin probably isn't going to be a reliable Fantasy option, but he sure is fun to watch. Last year he caught 18 of 37 targets for 254 yards (a 16.6 avg.) and two touchdowns. The guy has blazing speed but doesn't have enough of an all-around game to be useful in Fantasy. Keep him off rosters unless your league rewards special-teams work.

Bye 10

Arrelious Benn, Eagles

Eagles receiver Arrelious Benn suffered a torn left ACL in training camp and is expected to miss the season. Benn was traded to Philadelphia this offseason, but now he will have to wait until 2014 to play again. Even when healthy Benn has minimal Fantasy value, and he is not worth drafting in most formats.

Bye 12

Earl Bennett, Bears

Earl Bennett shouldn't be on anyone's Fantasy radar after a third straight season of mediocre production and injuries. Over the past three years he has totaled 99 catches for 1,317 yards and six touchdowns -- numbers Brandon Marshall beat in one season by himself. Even if Bennett lands the slot receiver's role for the Bears he just isn't expected to be productive for Fantasy purposes.

Bye 8

Davone Bess, Browns

Davone Bess will finally experience living in a difficult climate after he was traded from the Browns to the Dolphins during the NFL Draft. Bess, who played collegiately at Hawaii and for Miami the past five seasons, will likely be the slot receiver in Cleveland this year. He has a lot to prove after a down season. In 2012, a year when the Dolphins had no go-to receiver, Bess struggled. He played in just 13 games, missing the final three with a back injury, and had 61 catches for 778 yards and one touchdown. Bess will enter this season as the No. 3 receiver at best for the Browns behind Josh Gordon and Greg Little. He should be a good source of receptions - he's had at least 50 catches every year of his career - but he's never topped 850 receiving yards or five touchdowns. Consider him a late-round pick in PPR leagues.

Bye 10

Armon Binns, Dolphins

Armon Binns will compete for a roster spot with the Dolphins in 2013, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve receiver. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 6

Justin Blackmon, Jaguars

Justin Blackmon is looking for more consistency in 2013 after the first half of his rookie season paled in comparison to the second half, but he'll have to wait until Week 5 to find it. That's because Blackmon is suspended for the first four games for violating the league's substance abuse policy. That means he'll miss gem matchups against the Raiders and Colts before playing the Rams. It also means Fantasy owners will have Blackmon for just four of the first nine weeks of the season (Jaguars are on bye in Week 9). So even though he finished last season with 39 catches for 615 yards (15.7 yards per catch) and four touchdowns over his final seven games, there's not enough reason to reach for him in drafts. Let him fall to you in Round 9 or 9 as a quality reserve receiver since he'll hold up a roster spot for you to begin the year. Jacksonville's quarterback issues certainly don't help his cause.

Bye 9

Anquan Boldin, 49ers

Anquan Boldin was traded from Baltimore to San Francisco in March as part of a salary-cap purge by the Ravens. In San Francisco, he was expected to serve as a quality possession receiver and run blocker, but that was before Michael Crabtree (Achilles) was hurt. Now he could be the No. 1 option in the passing game. The Niners' offense went from good to great last season with Colin Kaepernick under center and Boldin should capitalize from working with such a young talent. Boldin, however, is an aging receiver who has scored six-plus touchdowns once in the last four years. He also has fallen between 800 and 1,025 yards in each of the last four seasons. Still, based on opportunity with Crabtree out, he could see a boost in production. Consider drafting Boldin as a potential No. 3 or 4 receiver with a mid-round pick.

Alan Bonner, Texans

The Texans selected Jacksonville State receiver Alan Bonner in April's draft. Bonner is an undersized receiver who doesn't have blazing speed (4.50 in the 40-yard dash) but did have success returning kicks and punts in college. He's only worth a pick in deep dynasty/keeper leagues that reward special-teams play.

Bye 8

LaVon Brazill, Colts

It looks like LaVon Brazill will compete for the No. 3 receiver job with the Colts this summer after playing sparingly as their No. 4 option as a rookie. He maintained a cool 16.9-yard average in the regular season with 11 catches for 186 yards and he scored on a 42-yard play. If Brazill can snag more playing time than he'd enter this season as a low-rent sleeper worth a late pick on Draft Day.

Bye 8

Dwayne Bowe, Chiefs

Dwayne Bowe signed a five-year contract to remain with the Chiefs, and he will return as the No. 1 receiver in Kansas City. We just hope the Bowe of 2010 shows up and not the guy we saw in 2012. In 2010, Bowe had 72 catches for 1,162 yards and 15 touchdowns. He was serviceable in 2011 with 81 catches for 1,159 yards and five touchdowns, but he was terrible last year with 59 catches for 801 yards and three touchdowns. Now that he's back in Kansas City, he will have a new quarterback in Alex Smith, and that should help his outlook, but Bowe has to prove he's motivated and willing to succeed. He should be considered a low-end No. 2 Fantasy receiver with the chance to be a must-start option depending on how he clicks with Smith and develops under Andy Reid. Bowe is worth drafting with a pick as early as Round 5 in all leagues.

Bye 10

Steve Breaston, Free Agent

Steve Breaston is a free agent after the Saints released him in mid-August. He is coming off a down year in 2012, and where he signs and what his role is will determine his value. Keep an eye on his offseason, but Breaston has minimal Fantasy value in the majority of leagues. He has never scored more than three touchdowns in a season and has just one year with more than 800 receiving yards.

Josh Boyce, Patriots

Josh Boyce has a good background based on the quarterbacks he's played with during his football career. It started with Robert Griffin III in high school and then Andy Dalton in college at TCU. Now he gets to catch passes from Tom Brady after he was drafted in Round 4. In 2012, Boyce had 66 catches for 891 yards and seven touchdowns. He finished his three-year career with 22 touchdowns and 2,535 career receiving yards, the second-most in TCU history. He will compete with Aaron Dobson and Donald Jones for playing time this season, so keep tabs on during training camp and the preseason. He could end up as a late-round flier in seasonal leagues, and he is worth a mid-round pick in rookie-only formats.

Bye 10

Kenny Britt, Titans

This is going to be a make-or-break season for Kenny Britt. He's healthy, he has no outstanding legal issues and he's entering a contract year, the perfect blend for him to finally buckle down and focus on football. Britt finished last year with three touchdowns in his last six games and three games with 10-plus Fantasy points in his last five, so there is some thought that he can still be helpful in Fantasy. There is plenty of risk with a guy like Britt but Fantasy owners can get him with an un-risky choice -- a middle- to late-round pick as a No. 3 receiver in deeper leagues or a reserve in more typical formats.

Bye 8

Jarrett Boykin, Packers

Jarrett Boykin will battle for a spot along the depth chart in training camp with the Packers this summer. He's unlikely to make an impact this season, so don't consider him for Fantasy use.

Bye 4

Antonio Brown, Steelers

The Steelers desperately need Antonio Brown to step up as their best receiving threat in 2013 after he struggled last year. Missing three games with a high-ankle sprain, Brown failed to duplicate his team MVP season of 2011, when he was a 1,000-yard receiver and kick returner. Brown caught nearly as many passes (66) as he did the season before (69), but his yardage dropped from 1,108 to 787 and his punt return average declined from 10.8 yards to 6.8. He also badly hurt the Steelers with second-half fumbles that ended up being the pivotal plays during road losses to the Raiders and Cowboys. Brown remains a nice No. 3 Fantasy receiver and spot starter in standard leagues, and he has the chance to be a weekly starter if he can play at a more consistent level without Mike Wallace opening up the field for him. On the bright side, Brown is an excellent value pick with upside as a mid-round selection.

Bye 5

Deion Branch, Free Agent

Deion Branch is a free agent this offseason, and it will be interesting to see if he remains loyal to the Patriots. Branch had two separate stints with New England in 2012, but he did not play well with 16 catches for 145 yards and no touchdowns. He will be 34 when next season starts, and his best days are clearly behind him. Keep an eye on where he signs, but he should not be drafted in any Fantasy leagues.

Justin Brown, Steelers

The Steelers selected Oklahoma receiver Justin Brown in the NFL draft. Brown has real nice size (6-foot-3, 207 pounds) but is a bit slow compared to other receivers. He was productive for the Sooners after transferring from Penn State, catching 73 passes and five touchdowns and seems polished, so he could contribute before too long. He's worth a late-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a middle- to late-round choice in rookie-only drafts.

WIDE RECEIVER (CONT.)

Mike Brown, Jaguars

Jaguars receiver Mike Brown went from the practice squad in 2012 to having a chance to start this season. Brown is in the mix to start in Week 1 for Jacksonville with Justin Blackmon suspended for the first four games. Once Blackmon returns, Brown could be the No. 3 receiver for the Jaguars. He doesn't offer much upside in the majority of leagues, but in deeper formats we could see Brown making a few plays. Put him on your radar and see how he does in training camp and the preseason. If he does start in Week 1 he could turn into a potential waiver wire addition.

Bye 9Vincent Brown, Chargers

We hope Vincent Brown's third season goes better than his sophomore campaign. Brown missed the 2012 season with a broken left ankle, but new coach Mike McCoy said he's hopeful Brown does well this year. As a rookie in 2011, Brown had 19 catches for 329 yards and two touchdowns in a limited role. Since the Chargers need help at receiver, Brown could contribute right away, and he has the chance to start opposite Malcom Floyd now that Danario Alexander (ACL) is out. He is worth a late-round flier in all leagues, and we hope Brown doesn't disappoint you if you consider him a future standout option. He has plenty of sleeper potential if he can stay healthy.

Bye 8Ryan Broyles, Lions

The hope is that receiver Ryan Broyles makes an Adrian Peterson-like recovery from a torn ACL to contribute to the Lions' offense in 2013. But those contributions might not happen for several weeks given his injury last December. Broyles' second torn ACL in his life could sideline him for the first six games of the season, making him the kind of sleeper worth stashing on your roster if you have the room or the injury spots. But don't consider him a must-grab unless you're prepared to wait for him to come back. Even then you'd have to hope he still has the ability to put up number like he did last year (310 yards on 22 catches with two touchdowns).

Bye 9Dez Bryant, Cowboys

Dez Bryant was a breakout star in his third season in the NFL in 2012, and he's looking to keep that momentum going this season. We think he can. Bryant closed 2012 with double digits in Fantasy points in a standard league in seven of his final eight games, including playing the last four with a broken finger. His final stats were 92 catches, 1,382 yards and 12 touchdowns, as he definitely became a star player. Bryant has 27 career touchdowns, and he's set his sights on 2,000 receiving yards this year. Although that's highly unlikely, he should continue to post dominant stats, and we consider him an upper echelon Fantasy receiver. Bryant should be among the Top 5 receivers drafted this season, and he could come off the board as early as Round 2. He had just 138 targets last year, and we hope that number will rise. The one concern with Bryant is injuries since he also hurt his back last season along with his finger, but as long as he's on the field you can expect tremendous production from this dynamic receiver.

Bye 11Nate Burleson, Lions

Nate Burleson took one for the team in late February when he restructured his contract to stay with the Lions. That could work out for Burleson, too. The veteran is savvy enough to know playing opposite Calvin Johnson should net some quality numbers, much like he had in 2011 when he had 73 catches for 757 yards (and a lousy three touchdowns). Burleson was on his way to another season like that when he broke his leg in Week 7 of 2012 and was wiped out. Knowing Burleson should serve as the No. 2 receiver for the Lions with Ryan Broyles recovering from a torn ACL and no one else on the Lions roster to threaten the spot, Fantasy owners should consider Burleson for a bench spot, particularly in PPR formats.

Bye 9Plaxico Burress, Steelers

If Plaxico Burress has any speed left in those legs of his, the Steelers will sure need it. Burress re-signed with the team this offseason and wants to make a sizable contribution on offense after the team lost speedster Mike Wallace via free agency. Once upon a time Burress has productive years with the Steelers and Giants but will be 36 years old when the season starts and might be relegated to limited snaps like he was last season. Until he proves otherwise, expectations remain low for Plax. Keep him off of Fantasy rosters.

Bye 5Brice Butler, Raiders

The Raiders drafted receiver Brice Butler in the seventh round of the NFL Draft out of San Diego State. He will compete for a roster spot, but even if he makes the final roster he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in the majority of leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 7Deon Butler, Chargers

Deon Butler signed with the Chargers this offseason, but he's a long-shot to make the final roster. In 2012, Butler appeared in just one game for Seattle but did not record a catch. He has just 57 catches for 611 yards and four touchdowns in four years, and he's not expected to make much of an impact if he makes the final roster. Keep an eye on what happens with Butler in training camp, but he's not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Bye 8Andre Caldwell, Broncos

Andre Caldwell signed a two-year contract with the Broncos last March, but he failed to do much in his first year in Denver in 2012. He finished the season with just one catch for 18 yards and one carry for 14 yards. He did not contribute in the return game in just eight games of action. Keep an eye on Caldwell to see if he makes the final roster this season. Even if he does he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 9Danny Coale, Cowboys

Danny Coale will look to come back from last year's torn ACL, which he suffered in practice in November while on the practice squad. The Cowboys liked Coale in training camp last year, but he battled foot and hamstring problems and didn't make the final roster. He could make an impact this season if he returns at 100 percent, but let him prove himself first. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Randall Cobb, Packers

Randall Cobb blossomed into a solid Fantasy receiver last season and the hope is he continues his progress in 2013. It took a few weeks but once the Packers were in a pinch with their run game they utilized Cobb more and his numbers took off. Starting in Week 5, when Cedric Benson got hurt, Cobb posted 10-plus Fantasy points in five of his next six games (with a TD or 100 total yards in each game). Cobb slowed down toward end the season, scoring once and posting two games with 100 yards in his final seven games including the playoffs. He finished by leading the Packers in catches (80), targets (104 for an incredible 77 pct. conversion rate), receiving yards (954) and total yards (1,086), throwing in eight touchdowns along the way. Already, the Packers have said they're going to take Cobb off of special teams and focus on using him more on offense, so chances are he will be in a position to put up better stats in 2013. Even with the Packers improving their run game this offseason, Cobb looks like a contender for big stats, particularly in the wake of a Jordy Nelson knee injury that could open Cobb up for a hot start. Cobb sizes up as the Packers' most explosive receiver worth a pick starting around 30th overall in standard leagues and 25th overall in PPR formats. He's a great low-end No. 1/high-end No. 2 Fantasy option.

Austin Collie, Free Agent

Austin Collie is looking for a job after rupturing his right patellar tendon last year. This follows a history of well-documented concussions. Collie really needs to prove that he can stay on the field for more than a handful of games before Fantasy owners should trust him. There are probably 100 better receivers you could draft.

Brandon Collins, Giants

Brandon Collins will compete for a roster spot for the Giants this season as a reserve receiver. Even if he makes the final roster he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all formats on Draft Day.

Joe Collins, Jets

Joe Collins is hoping to make the final roster for the Jets as a reserve wide receiver. Even if he makes the team he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Marques Colston, Saints

When it comes to year-to-year stats, Marques Colston exemplifies consistency. Last year, he posted his sixth season in seven years with at least 1,000 yards and seven touchdowns, ultimately scoring 10 times. But a closer look at his 2012 numbers might sway Fantasy owners from leaning on Colston as a No. 1 option. The Saints' leading receiver had 10-plus Fantasy points just six times in 2012 including in Weeks 16 and 17. He also collected four touchdowns and 284 of his yards in Weeks 4 and 5. There were eight weeks where he had under 80 yards with no touchdowns. Despite this uncharacteristic inconsistency, Colston remains the most highly targeted wide receiver on the pass-happy Saints. Getting him to serve as a No. 2 receiver, particularly one you'll "settle" for in Round 4 or maybe even Round 5, shouldn't be disappointing.

Bye 4

Kevin Cone, Falcons

Kevin Cone will compete for a spot along the receiving depth chart in Atlanta this summer. He'll likely need one of the two top receivers to get hurt to have even a glimmer of hope of being useful in Fantasy, so don't draft him.

Josh Cooper, Browns

Seeing some playing time last year with his old college buddy Brandon Weeden, Josh Cooper had eight catches for 106 yards. He's on the roster bubble in training camp this summer and isn't worth your worry in Fantasy.

Riley Cooper, Eagles

Riley Cooper will be the No. 4 receiver for the Eagles this season behind DeSean Jackson, Jeremy Maclin and Jason Avant. Cooper has yet to impress Fantasy owners with just five career touchdowns, and last year was his best season with 23 catches for 248 yards and three touchdowns. He could see a boost playing for new coach Chip Kelly, but we're not putting a lot of stock into Cooper on Draft Day. If he starts out the season playing well then add him off the waiver wire, but let him prove himself first.

Terrance Copper, Chiefs

Terrance Copper will compete for a job as a backup wide receiver and on special teams for the Chiefs this year. Keep an eye on his role, but he has minimal Fantasy value in the majority of leagues. He should be ignored in all leagues on Draft Day since he had just eight catches for 79 yards in 2012.

Jerricho Cotchery, Steelers

Jerricho Cotchery might have to step into the Steelers' third receivers role this year, a role that doesn't seem too appealing to Fantasy owners. Last year Cotchery caught just 17 passes in 14 games for 205 yards without an end-zone visit. He has pretty good size and hands but just isn't the potential playmaker that he was years ago. Keep him grounded on waivers.

Bye 7

Bye 10

Bye 12

Bye 10

Bye 5

Michael Crabtree, 49ers

Michael Crabtree was on the verge of becoming a star, but a torn Achilles in an offseason workout in May has derailed that. Crabtree could still return this season, but he's not going to be as effective in 2013 as he could have been before the injury. If he does come back on the timetable originally given, which would be November, then he might be worth a late-round pick in the majority of leagues. But if we don't know if he'll return at all by the time training camp roles around you'll leave him undrafted and just try to grab him off the waiver wire. Crabtree picked up his game with the addition of Colin Kaepernick. In the seven starts Kaepernick made in 2012, Crabtree had 41 catches for 595 yards and five touchdowns. If you project that over 16 games, Crabtree would have finished with 94 catches for 1,360 yards and 11 touchdowns. That equates to 202 Fantasy points, which would have made Crabtree the No. 3 Fantasy receiver last year in standard leagues behind Calvin Johnson (214) and Brandon Marshall (210). Now we'll have to wait to see if Crabtree and Kaepernick can pick up once he's back from the Achilles injury.

Josh Cribbs, Raiders

Josh Cribbs signed with the Raiders in mid-May. He did so while in the same week a rival general manager said Cribbs wasn't quite healthy. Cribbs could work his way into the mix at receiver and almost certainly will return kicks but no major stats are expected for the nine-year vet.

Juron Criner, Raiders

Juron Criner had a quiet rookie season in 2012, and we hope he can make more of an impact this year. The former fifth-round pick from Arizona had just 16 catches for 151 yards and one touchdown on 31 targets. He never topped 29 yards in any game, and he has a lot to prove. The Raiders have at least two receivers ahead of him on the depth chart with Denarius Moore and Rod Streater, and even Jacoby Ford might be ahead of Criner. There is some potential there, but let him prove himself first. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Victor Cruz, Giants

Victor Cruz continues to prove that he's among the best receivers in the NFL. After a breakout season in 2011 when he had 82 catches for a franchise-record 1,536 yards and nine touchdowns, he had 86 catches for 1,092 yards and 10 touchdowns last season. He helped Fantasy owners with eight double-digit scoring games, and he picked up the slack for the Giants with Hakeem Nicks battling multiple leg injuries. Cruz should again be a dominant force, and we consider him a top-15 Fantasy receiver in all leagues. He is worth drafting as early as Round 4 in all formats.

B.J. Cunningham, Eagles

B.J. Cunningham will try to earn a roster spot with the Eagles this season, but he has minimal Fantasy value even if he makes the final team as a backup receiver. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 9

Drew Davis, Falcons

Drew Davis will compete for a spot along the receiving depth chart in Atlanta this summer. He'll likely need one of the two top receivers to get hurt to have even a glimmer of hope of being useful in Fantasy, so don't draft him.

Eric Decker, Broncos

Eric Decker, as expected, had a breakout campaign in 2012. It was his third year in the NFL, and he was paired with a future Hall of Fame quarterback in Peyton Manning. He broke out with career highs in catches (85), yards (1,064) and touchdowns (13). Decker had double digits in Fantasy points eight times, including three in a row to close the season, and he finished with 122 targets. Decker is technically No. 2 on the depth chart at receiver behind Demaryius Thomas, but they are essentially 1 and 1A. Decker now enters a potential contract year as his rookie deal is set to expire after this season. He also has to share production with new addition Wes Welker. That will cut into Decker's totals, but he's not going to disappear. The incentive of a new deal, along with another year playing with Manning, could help Decker shine this season. He should be considered a solid No. 2 Fantasy receiver, and he's worth drafting as early as Round 4 in the majority of leagues.

Aaron Dobson, Patriots

The Patriots drafted receiver Aaron Dobson out of Marshall in the second round of the NFL Draft, and he's expected to start opposite Danny Amendola. In each of his last three seasons in college, Dobson had at least 44 catches and 668 yards receiving. He had 12 touchdown catches in 2011. His 24 career touchdown receptions tied former Patriot Troy Brown for fourth most in Marshall history, and New England also has a good history with another former Marshall standout in Randy Moss. If Dobson earns a starting job he would be worth a late-round flier in all leagues. He's worth at least a second-round pick in rookie-only formats.

Kevin Dorsey, Packers

The Packers selected Maryland receiver Kevin Dorsey in April's draft. Dorsey has the height and weight but not the speed to go with them but does have very good hands and some short-area quickness. He's unlikely to make a Fantasy impact anytime soon.

Tandon Doss, Ravens

Tandon Doss did little in 2012, playing in 14 games, but he'll battle for playing time in camp this summer. Coach John Harbaugh has spoken highly about Doss in the past and could give him the chance to prove himself. At 6-2 and 200 pounds, the versatile player might get a chance at some playing time and earn a role as a No. 3 receiver for the Ravens. If that happens, then owners in standard formats can claim Doss off waivers during the season.

Early Doucet, Free Agent

Early Doucet will look for a new team this season after he was released by the Cardinals in March. In 2012, Doucet had 28 catches for 207 yards and no touchdowns. He has minimal Fantasy value in the majority of leagues and is not worth drafting in most formats no matter where he ends up playing this year.

Harry Douglas, Falcons

Bye 6

You'd think playing as the third receiver in the Falcons' offense would result in some big numbers, but for Harry Douglas it hasn't happened yet. Over his career, Harry Douglas has yet to register more than one receiving touchdown or 500 receiving yards in a season. We wouldn't draft him in any format.

Marcus Easley, Bills

Bye 12

The Bills are hoping Marcus Easley can contribute in his fourth season after having yet to make a catch in the NFL. Easley missed his rookie year with a knee injury and then was out in 2011 with a heart condition. He spent most of 2012 on the practice squad, so this year is big for him. Until he shows he can stay healthy and contribute then he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Jeremy Ebert, Patriots

Bye 10

Jeremy Ebert will compete for a roster spot with the Patriots in 2013, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve receiver. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Julian Edelman, Patriots

Bye 10

Julian Edelman has re-signed with the Patriots after he was a free agent this offseason. His return will help lessen the blow of Wes Welker leaving even with the addition of Danny Amendola because Edelman can play in the slot with Amendola outside. Either way, Edelman will be a reserve receiver for the Patriots, but don't be surprised if he has some big games for a few weeks during the season. In 2012, had two games with double digits in Fantasy points, and we like this move to return to the Patriots. He is worth a late-round pick in deeper leagues, but he should not be drafted in most standard formats.

Armanti Edwards, Panthers

Bye 4

Armanti Edwards enters a contract year with one really nice play under his belt over his first three seasons. He had an 82-yard catch in 2012 but still has yet to score a touchdown. With a poor track record and potentially his team unwilling to give him a larger role, Fantasy owners shouldn't expect him to perk up.

Braylon Edwards, Jets

Bye 10

Braylon Edwards has re-signed with the Jets on a one-year deal. The Jets brought Edwards back to help fortify a receiving corps desperately in need of a boost, but he might not be the best suited to improve things drastically. For starters, Edwards had just 18 catches for 199 yards and one touchdown last season with Seattle and the Jets (he played three games in New York in 2012). His last good season was 2010 when he recorded 53 catches for 904 yards and seven touchdowns for New York. He has minimal Fantasy value this season in standard leagues and is not worth drafting.

Kevin Elliot, Bills

Bye 12

Kevin Elliot will enter this season trying to earn a role with the Bills. He ended 2012 on Buffalo's roster after spending most of the year with Jacksonville, where he had 10 catches in 13 games. Keep an eye on his progress in training camp, but he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Larry Fitzgerald, Cardinals

Bye 9

Larry Fitzgerald had an amazing offseason, and we're not talking about any exotic vacations he might have had. Fitzgerald got a new coach in Bruce Arians, who favors downfield passing, and a significant upgrade at quarterback in Carson Palmer. Fitzgerald needed a change because 2012 was the worst season of his career, and it was predominately because of poor quarterback play. Fitzgerald was limited to 71 catches for 798 yards and four touchdowns, and he finished as the No. 41 receiver despite being the seventh-most targeted receiver (156) in the NFL. So it was clear the Cardinals were trying to get Fitzgerald the ball, but they weren't having much success. That should change this season. Fitzgerald should be considered a low-end No. 1 Fantasy receiver on Draft Day, and we recommend drafting him with a pick in Round 3 or 4. If he bounces back as expected then he should be a steal this season in all leagues.

Malcom Floyd, Chargers

Bye 8

Malcom Floyd suffered a knee sprain in training camp practice in mid-August and is a question mark to begin the season. The veteran has always been on the cusp of becoming a weekly starter but has never quite broken through. Floyd had one of the best years of his career in 2012 with a career-high 56 catches for 814 yards and five touchdowns including six games with double digits in Fantasy points. But injuries have begun to take a toll on the soon-to-be 32-year-old. If he can get back on the field he could be the No. 1 receiver after Danario Alexander (ACL) went down for the year. But for now there's more upside in teammates Vincent Brown and rookie Keenan Allen. Once Floyd's cleared for work, then he'll be worth a look as a reserve.

Michael Floyd, Cardinals

Michael Floyd has the chance to improve in his sophomore season after an inconsistent rookie campaign. As a rookie last season, Floyd had 45 catches for 562 yards and two touchdowns. He was the No. 3 receiver behind Larry Fitzgerald and Andre Roberts, but his role is expected to expand this season, possibly starting ahead of Roberts. He closed 2012 on a high note with eight catches for 166 yards and a touchdown in Week 17 on 14 targets, and we hope he can build off that performance. Floyd is worth a late-round flier in all standard leagues this year, especially with the addition of Carson Palmer at quarterback and Bruce Arians as the coach, and he should be taken with a mid-round selection in dynasty leagues. We expect Floyd to eventually become a playmaker, but the passing attack in Arizona will have to improve for that to happen.

Bye 9Jacoby Ford, Raiders

Jacoby Ford will look to regain any potential he flashed as a rookie after being out in 2012 following foot surgery. Ford might have to earn his roster spot, and he could be fourth on the depth chart at best behind Denarius Moore, Darrius Heyward-Bey and Rod Streater. Ford, who is among the fastest players in the NFL (he ran a 4.22 40-yard dash at the 2010 combine), had 25 catches for 470 yards and two touchdowns and 10 carries for 155 yards as a rookie. He wasn't much of a factor in 2011 because of injuries and had just 19 catches for 279 yards and one touchdown, but now he will have to step up his performance. The Raiders will likely use Ford as a return man and in special packages, but he has minimal Fantasy value on offense. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues, but you might consider adding him off the waiver wire if he starts out playing well.

Bye 7Corey Fuller, Lions

The Lions selected Virginia Tech receiver Corey Fuller in April's draft. Fuller has sleeper potential thanks to his size (6-foot-2) and speed (4.32 in the 40-yard dash at his Pro Day). He doesn't have bulk to go with it and is still considered a raw prospect, albeit one with some good potential. He's worth a late pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and rookie-only drafts.

Bye 9Jeff Fuller, Dolphins

Jeff Fuller will compete for a roster spot with the Dolphins in 2013, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve receiver. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 6Pierre Garcon, Redskins

Pierre Garcon is having trouble staying healthy, which has become a concern for Fantasy owners, but we have confidence his second season with the Redskins will be better than the first. Garcon missed six games and was limited in two others because of a nagging toe problem last year. Then this offseason he had chest surgery, although he's expected to be fine for training camp. Garcon showed last year that when he played, he was dominant. He had double digits in Fantasy points in four of the eight games where he was close to 100 percent and finished the season with 44 catches for 633 yards and four touchdowns. Garcon avoided surgery on his foot, which is a positive, but the injury could still be a concern. He also has to deal with the health of his quarterback, Robert Griffin III, who is coming back from major knee surgery. But if all the reports on Garcon and Griffin are positive through training camp, then Garcon should be considered a solid No. 2 Fantasy receiver. We would draft him as early as Round 5 or 6 in the majority of leagues.

Bye 5David Gettis, Panthers

David Gettis hasn't recorded a stat in consecutive seasons thanks to a torn ACL suffered in August, 2011. He's signed up for this season but that's it, making him a potential roster casualty if the Panthers need space. Gettis is best left on waivers until he can prove himself worthy of being added to rosters.

Bye 4Brandon Gibson, Dolphins

Brandon Gibson signed with the Dolphins this offseason, and he will be the No. 3 receiver behind Mike Wallace and Brian Hartline. Gibson played well in 2012 with the Rams with 51 catches for 691 yards and five touchdowns. The yardage and touchdowns were a career high, but that's probably his ceiling, especially if he's just the slot receiver. Keep an eye on Gibson's role with the Dolphins, but he has minimal Fantasy value coming into the year. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Bye 6Mardy Gilyard, Chiefs

Mardy Gilyard had a brief stint with coach Andy Reid in Philadelphia in 2012, and he will try to resurrect his career with Reid again in Kansas City. Gilyard ended 2012 with the Jets, and in two seasons he has eight catches for 78 yards. Keep an eye on his role with the Chiefs, but he has minimal Fantasy value and should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Bye 10Ted Ginn, Panthers

Ted Ginn signed with the Panthers this offseason, and he will continue to do what he does best -- return kicks. The Panthers might decide to use Ginn more as a receiver this year, but his best asset is in the return game. At best, Ginn would be the No. 3 receiver behind Steve Smith and Brandon LaFell. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Chris Givens, Rams

Chris Givens could be a significant playmaker for the Rams this season and Fantasy owners. The Rams overhauled their receiving corps this year with Danny Amendola and Brandon Gibson gone as free agents, and rookies Tavon Austin and Stedman Bailey brought in as replacements. While there is a lot of hype for Austin, Givens could steal the spotlight since he appeared to develop a good rapport with Sam Bradford last season. In 2012, his rookie year, Givens posted moderate stats with 42 catches for 698 yards and three touchdowns, but he played well during the five games Amendola was out, which was Weeks 6-8 and 13-14. Givens had at least eight Fantasy points in four of those five games and benefited from the increased targets. He should be considered a late-round flier in all leagues this season with his increased role. Givens has plenty of upside, so keep him on your radar on Draft Day.

Richard Goodman, Chargers

Richard Goodman will try to make the final roster this season with the Chargers. Even if he does land with San Diego out of training camp he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Marquise Goodwin, Bills

The Bills drafted receiver Marquise Goodwin in the third round out of Texas, and he's expected to compete for playing time right away in Buffalo. Goodwin is a track star - he competed at the Olympics in London and finished 10th in the long jump - and is a speedy receiver. In football, he had 120 catches for 1,364 yards and seven touchdowns in 50 career games, including 22 starts for the Longhorns. The Bills have Steve Johnson and fellow rookie Robert Woods likely ahead of Goodwin on the depth chart, but he will compete with T.J. Graham for the No. 3 role. We wouldn't recommend drafting Goodwin in most standard leagues, but he is someone to monitor. Plan on drafting him with a mid-round pick in rookie-only leagues.

Josh Gordon, Browns

For a rookie chosen via the supplemental draft in July, Josh Gordon turned out to be a pretty good player for the Browns. The hopes are he can keep it going after leading the team in receiving yards (805) and receiving touchdowns (five). A good chunk of Gordon's numbers came during a three-week streak in Weeks 4 through 6 where he totaled seven catches for 240 yards and four touchdowns. After that he tailed off in what might have been a case of hitting the proverbial rookie wall. If the Browns' offense improves under new head coach Rob Chudzinski and offensive coordinator Norv Turner, there's a chance for Gordon to break out in his second season. Considering him with a late-round pick isn't a bad idea.

Bye 11

T.J. Graham, Bills

T.J. Graham was basically the de facto No. 2 receiver for the Bills in 2012 behind Steve Johnson, and he will compete for a similar role this year. Graham played on nearly 70 percent of the snaps for Buffalo in 2012, but he managed just 31 catches for 322 yards and one touchdown as a rookie. He has the chance to improve, especially since the Bills upgraded at quarterback with rookie E.J. Manuel and Kevin Kolb, but we don't expect Graham to have much Fantasy value barring a significant change in the passing game. The additions of rookies Robert Woods and Marquise Goodwin didn't help Graham either. Don't draft Graham in the majority of leagues, but keep an eye on his progress during the season to see if he's worth adding off the waiver wire.

A.J. Green, Bengals

Bengals sensation A.J. Green finished last season tied for the second-most Fantasy points among wide receivers in standard-scoring leagues. He was one of seven wide receivers to accrue over 150 targets (he caught 58.3 pct. of them, an improvement). He was one of four receivers to have 10 or more games with at least 10 Fantasy points. Through two years he has 19 games with double-digit Fantasy points out of 32 and 23 games with at least eight Fantasy points. It's clear he's not only the lead receiver on the Bengals but among the best receivers in Fantasy Football. As one of the safest choices out there, expect Green to get snared with a pick between 20th and 30th overall in pretty much every single draft.

Jared Green, Cowboys

Jared Green will compete for a roster spot with the Cowboys this year but has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day even if he makes the final roster.

Derek Hagan, Free Agent

Derek Hagan is a free agent this offseason, and he will look to sign with a team as a reserve receiver. Keep an eye on where Hagan lands, but he has minimal Fantasy value in the majority of leagues and should not be drafted. He had just 20 catches for 259 yards and no touchdowns with the Raiders in 2012.

Cobi Hamilton, Bengals

On Day 3 of the NFL Draft, the Bengals added Arkansas wide receiver Cobi Hamilton. Hamilton has some good height but is rail-thin even at 212 pounds and isn't very physical. No one is worth a pick in seasonal Fantasy leagues. He's worth a late pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and rookie-only formats.

Bye 12

Bye 12

Bye 11

Bye 12

WIDE RECEIVER (CONT.)

Leonard Hankerson, Redskins

Bye 5

Leonard Hankerson was a popular sleeper coming into 2012, but he failed to live up to the hype with just 38 catches for 543 yards and three touchdowns. We'll find out if his third year in the NFL is a breakout year, and the Redskins could use a boost at receiver besides just Pierre Garcon with Josh Morgan and Santana Moss not that inspiring. Keep an eye on Hankerson during training camp, and he could be worth a late-round flier if he performs well in the preseason. Don't invest heavily in Hankerson, but this could be the year he improves on his meager performance to start his career.

Kevin Hardy, Giants

Bye 9

Kevin Hardy will compete for a roster spot for the Giants this season as a reserve receiver. Even if he makes the final roster he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all formats on Draft Day.

Chris Harper, Seahawks

Bye 12

The Seahawks drafted receiver Chris Harper in the fourth round of the NFL Draft from Kansas State. He led the Wildcats last year with 857 yards and had three touchdowns on 58 receptions, and he's a big target at 6-foot-1, 230 pounds. Harper, at best, could be Seattle's No. 4 receiver behind Percy Harvin, Rice and Golden Tate, but Doug Baldwin is also in the mix. Ignore Harper in most seasonal leagues on Draft Day, but he is worth a late-round pick in rookie-only formats.

Dwayne Harris, Cowboys

Bye 11

Dwayne Harris is hoping the number three is good to him this year. This is his third year in the NFL, which is typically when receivers have a breakout campaign. And he has the chance to be the No. 3 receiver for the Cowboys behind Dez Bryant and Miles Austin. Harris emerged as the No. 3 receiver toward the end of the 2012 season. He finished the year with 17 catches for 22 yards and one touchdown, but all of that production came in the final seven weeks of the year. When you factor in Jason Witten, the Cowboys don't have much need for a third receiver, but Harris is still worth a look in deeper leagues. If he opens the season No. 3 on the depth chart then consider him with a late-round flier. His main competition for the role should come from rookie Terrance Williams, but Harris should still see his share of targets.

Brian Hartline, Dolphins

Bye 6

Dolphins receiver Brian Hartline picked the right time to have a career year since he was a free agent this offseason. He was rewarded with a five-year $30 million contract. In 2012, Hartline set career highs in catches (74) and yards (1,083). He only managed one touchdown, which hurt his Fantasy production, but he still played at a high level for the Dolphins. Now, Hartline is part of a crowded receiving corps since the Dolphins added Mike Wallace, Brandon Gibson and Dustin Keller this offseason. Hartline hasn't been a high-volume scorer in his career with only six touchdowns in four seasons, but he could improve with less attention this year. We consider him a Fantasy reserve, and he is worth drafting with a late-round flier.

Percy Harvin, Vikings

Bye 5

Percy Harvin was traded from the Vikings to the Seahawks in March but won't play for his new team until November at the earliest. Harvin needed surgery for a torn labrum in his hip in August and has been ruled out for most of the regular season. The team hopes to have him back in Week 13. While that might perk up the Seahawks in time for their playoff run, it's a nightmare for Fantasy owners. Harvin shouldn't be counted on to help out and should be drafted accordingly, which is to say not at all. Any owner who drafts Harvin would have to carry him on their bench all year and hope to make the playoffs to use him. But there's no guarantee he'll be available, making him risky. The only people who should draft Harvin are those in long-term formats as well as those in leagues with very deep benches or IR spots. Otherwise there's too much risk in spending a draft pick on him and carrying him on a roster all year long. The smarter Fantasy owner will claim him off waivers around the midseason in hopes of having his services late in the year.

Andrew Hawkins, Bengals

Bye 12

Andrew Hawkins will enter training camp with an eye on pushing for more playing time, if not starting. Hawkins started just two games last season and played in over 60 percent of the snaps in just six games. He tallied 51 catches on 80 targets for 533 yards and four touchdowns. The sentiment is that while Hawkins is explosive he's also small and not quite as polished as he could be. Once he gets more experience, and it could come with a strong offseason/preseason, then he could develop into a solid Fantasy contributor.

Lavelle Hawkins, Titans

Bye 8

Lavelle Hawkins is expected to vie for duty as a reserve for the Titans this summer. With modest stats over the course of his career, nothing big is expected from him in 2013. Keep him off of Fantasy rosters.

Vidal Hazelton, Jets

Bye 10

Vidal Hazelton is hoping to make the final roster for the Jets as a reserve wide receiver. Even if he makes the team he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Junior Hemingway, Chiefs

Bye 10

Junior Hemingway will compete for a role in Kansas City's receiving corps and work on special teams. Even if he makes the final roster he would not be worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Devery Henderson, Redskins

Bye 5

Redskins receiver Devery Henderson signed in Washington this season, and he will compete for a roster spot as their deep threat. In 2012, Henderson struggled with the Saints. He caught 22 passes for 316 yards and a touchdown last year, registering sixth on the team in receptions and seventh in receiving yards. The nine-year veteran is a risk to use as anything more than a one-week replacement off waivers if he makes the final roster with the Redskins.

Devin Hester, Bears

All indications are that Devin Hester will focus more on special-teams work than wide receiver after years of trying to get him going in the offense. He had under 500 receiving yards in each of the last three seasons with a total of six scores over that span. Leave Hester to the middle and late rounds of leagues that reward special-teams yardage.

Darrius Heyward-Bey, Colts

Darrius Heyward-Bey was released by the Raiders in a cost-cutting move this offseason, but he wasn't out of work long. He signed with the Colts in April, and he's expected to be the No. 3 receiver for Andrew Luck behind Reggie Wayne and T.Y. Hilton. Heyward-Bey had a breakout year in 2011 with 64 catches, 975 yards and four touchdowns but then regressed to 41 catches, 606 yards and five touchdowns last year. We hope he can turn things around this season playing in Indianapolis' high-flying, aerial attack. He has some sleeper appeal with the Colts, but he's only worth a late-round pick. If he can click with Luck right away he could have a nice year, but we want to see him prove it first before calling him a must-own receiver in all leagues.

Jason Hill, Free Agent

Jason Hill is a free agent this offseason, and he will look for work as a reserve wide receiver and special teams player. He spent time with the Jets in 2012, and he had two catches for 15 yards and a touchdown. Keep an eye on where he signs, but Hill is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Stephen Hill, Jets

Stephen Hill will look to improve in his sophomore campaign after a disappointing rookie year in 2012. Hill had 21 catches for 252 yards and three touchdowns as a rookie, but his season ended early in Week 14 with a knee injury. He's expected to be fine for the start of training camp, but the Jets need to upgrade at quarterback for Hill to be successful. Keep an eye on what happens this offseason, but Hill would only be worth drafting with a late-round pick in deeper leagues.

T.Y. Hilton, Colts

The Colts uncovered a gem in T.Y. Hilton last year and his explosive play should continue this year. He averaged 17.2 yards per catch and improbably led the team in touchdowns with seven while catching 50 passes for 861 yards. What's helpful is that 10 percent of Hilton's catches were each good for at least 40 yards, and 30 of them were good for either a touchdown or a first down. It's clear Hilton will remain a playmaker in the Colts offense who should improve not only on the number of targets he gets, but also the percentage of them he catches (including the playoffs he had 108 targets and caught 55.8 percent of them). Hilton will get picked as a low-end No. 3 Fantasy receiver with a Round 7 or 8 pick, a pretty good value considering his potential.

Bye 8

Domenik Hixon, Panthers

Domenik Hixon signed with the Panthers this offseason, and he's expected to be the No. 3 receiver in Carolina behind Steve Smith and Brandon LaFell. Hixon spent the past five years with the Giants, and he played well in 2012 with 39 catches for 567 yards and two touchdowns. He could have the chance to make plays for the Panthers this year, but let him prove himself first. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Bye 4

Chris Hogan, Bills

Chris Hogan will enter the season trying to earn a role with the Bills. He has yet to make a catch in the NFL after stints with the Giants and Dolphins. Keep an eye on his progress in training camp, but he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 12

Trindon Holliday, Broncos

Trindon Holliday doesn't provide much as a receiver. In three seasons, he has two catches for 17 yards. But as a return man he's as good as you can find. In 2012, he appeared in 10 games for the Broncos after being cut by the Texans. He had a punt return and kickoff return for touchdowns during the regular season, but he made NFL history in one playoff game against the Ravens. Holliday became the first player in NFL history to return both a punt and kickoff for a touchdown in the same postseason game. He finished the year with 47 punt returns for 481 yards and a touchdown and 21 kickoff returns for 552 yards and a touchdown. He's only useful in leagues that reward return men, otherwise he should not be drafted in most standard formats.

Bye 9

Andre Holmes, Patriots

Andre Holmes will compete for a roster spot with the Patriots in 2013, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve receiver. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 10

Santonio Holmes, Jets

Santonio Holmes is trying to come back from last year's foot injury and prove he can still be a reliable weapon for the Jets and Fantasy owners. Since coming to the Jets in 2010 he has been a disappointment, and in 2012 he appeared in just four games before hurting his foot. He should be fine for training camp, but the Jets need plenty of help in their passing game to make Holmes successful. A new quarterback is a possibility, and Holmes would benefit with an upgrade over Mark Sanchez even if it's rookie Geno Smith. The Jets did get a new offensive coordinator with Marty Mornhinweg replacing the fired Tony Sparano, and the Jets will now have a West Coast-style offense, which could give Holmes the chance for more catches. He has the look of a reserve Fantasy receiver with upside, and he's worth the gamble with a late-round pick in all leagues. Keep in mind he is still the Jets' No. 1 receiver, and even if it is on a bad team he can still be productive as a reserve option.

DeAndre Hopkins, Texans

The Houston Texans selected Clemson receiver DeAndre Hopkins with the 27th overall pick in the NFL draft. Hopkins is 6-foot-1 and 214 pounds and has a great track record going back to his days in Clemson. In three seasons Hopkins caught 205 passes for 3,009 yards and 27 touchdowns including 18 in 13 games last season. Hopkins isn't the biggest or fastest, but he plays quick, controlled and tough with reliable hands and focus to locate and pluck. He is a natural receiver with outstanding awareness for the position and has been productive wherever he's been. Hopkins does not have a massive body like Johnson but can manipulate routes and create separation. In short, he's just what the Texans ordered because he can come in right away and be productive in single coverage based on the body of work he's made for himself in college. Hopkins will be worth a late pick in seasonal leagues as a sleeper, a mid- to late-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and more than likely a Top 20 pick in rookie-only drafts.

Justin Hunter, Titans

The Titans stayed local and took Tennessee wide receiver Justin Hunter with a second-round pick. Hunter is 6-foot-4 and is known for his elite feet (he ran a 4.36 in the 40-yard dash). With most of his playing time in his junior year in 2012, Green caught 73 passes for 1,083 yards (14.8 avg.) and nine touchdowns. He has the speed and height but he weighs just 196 pounds, leading some to believe he might not have the muscle to be a dominant receiver. He also has just one year of experience in school and has shown the tendency to catch with his body and not his hands. But the kid can fly and that rare talent is coveted by NFL teams. This might be a player who does little as a rookie but develops into a prime talent: the Titans have Kenny Britt entering a contract year and Nate Washington getting over $4 million. Hunter might not be worth even a late pick for this season but is worth a middle- to late-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a second-round choice in rookie-only drafts.

DeSean Jackson, Eagles

We hope the addition of new coach Chip Kelly can help DeSean Jackson turn back the clock because he has been a huge disappointment the past two years. In 2011, while dealing with his contract status, Jackson had just 58 catches for 961 yards and four touchdowns. He then dropped to 45 catches for 700 yards and two touchdowns in 2012, including being out the final five games with a rib injury. Kelly has promised to use Jackson a lot this year, which is obviously a positive, and now that Jeremy Maclin (ACL) is out for the season, Jackson is easily the No. 1 target in the passing game. We know Jackson was once a budding star since he had 2,200 receiving yards and 17 total touchdowns from 2009-10, but he has to stay healthy and prove he wants to be an elite receiver again. The good thing with Jackson this year is you can draft him with a mid-round pick compared to the past two years when he was an early-round selection. If you land Jackson as your No. 3 receiver then you're in good shape, and if Jackson plays 16 games he can again reach 1,000 receiving yards with at least seven touchdowns.

Bye 8Vincent Jackson, Buccaneers

Most would say Vincent Jackson made the impact the Bucs had hoped he would when they signed him to a large contract last offseason, but a look into the stats tell a slightly different story. All told, Jackson had a career-best 72 catches for 1,384 yards (also a career-best) and eight touchdowns. Not bad, right? Well, the 72 catches he had came on a whopping 147 targets, meaning he somehow caught just below 50 percent of the passes Josh Freeman threw his way. He also exceeded 10 Fantasy points in just half of his games, the same as teammate Mike Williams, who happened to score nine touchdowns. And when he didn't score 10 Fantasy points, he really didn't do much, posting five Fantasy points or less in six games. Jackson continues to serve as a boom-or-bust receiver but given the right price on Draft Day is someone worth picking up. Let's call him a No. 1 Fantasy option worth a pick starting in late Round 3.

Bye 5Lestar Jean, Texans

Lestar Jean figures to be in the mix to work as the No. 3 receiver behind Andre Johnson and rookie DeAndre Hopkins in training camp. Last year Jean had 151 yards on six catches: One went for over 20 yards, two went for over 40 yards, four went for first downs and another saw him finish in the end zone. Jean is considered raw but does have some obvious deep speed, but he's not the only one on the Texans roster with it. As of now he's not worth a pick in Fantasy drafts but if it comes to pass that he's working with the first-team offense in training camp this summer then he'll emerge as a late-round flier.

Bye 8Alshon Jeffery, Bears

Alshon Jeffery had his moments in 2012, scoring in his first game, but injuries ultimately robbed him of any potential to contribute on a weekly basis. He'll head into the year locked into the No. 2 receiver's role and should see an uptick in targets and production in Marc Trestman's new up-tempo offense. He's not worth taking with anything more than a late-round pick on the hunch he might break out in his second year but with Brandon Marshall hogging targets away from him that could be tough to do.

Bye 8A.J. Jenkins, 49ers

A.J. Jenkins was traded from the 49ers to the Chiefs in a mid-August swap. The Niners basically gave him away after taking him with a first-round pick in 2012. That should tell you all you need to know about Jenkins. Don't draft him until he shows rapid improvement during the regular season.

WIDE RECEIVER (CONT.)

Greg Jennings, Vikings

Greg Jennings joined the Vikings after spending seven seasons with the Packers. It was a must-add for Minnesota after its receiving corps was left barren following the Percy Harvin trade to Seattle. Jennings will be in a familiar role -- the No. 1 receiver -- with the Vikes, though he won't quite have the same kind of quarterback throwing to him. Health has been a factor for Jennings -- he missed three games in 2011 with a leg injury, and groin and abdomen injuries kept him off the field for eight games last season. But once he was healthy he finished strong. Including two postseason games among his final four contests, he scored four times and caught 25 balls for 280 yards. That might be enough of a sample size to show Jennings has plenty left in the tank, but concerns about speed (his receiving average is declining and he caught just five passes for 20-plus yards in 10 total games last year) and his health could keep him from being a Fantasy superstar. The good news is that Jennings can be had a much later point in drafts compared to recent years as you can probably make it to Round 6 and still see him there. Consider him a No. 3 Fantasy receiver with obvious upside.

Jerrel Jernigan, Giants

Jerrel Jernigan will provide depth for the Giants this year as a reserve receiver. He's entering his third year in the NFL, which is typically when receivers have a breakout year, but Jernigan has three catches for 22 yards in his career. Keep an eye on his production early in the season, and if he starts out playing well then add him off the waiver wire. But Jernigan should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Andre Johnson, Texans

Concerns about missing time because of injuries pushed Andre Johnson down draft boards last season, but those were put to rest after he had a career-high 1,598 yards during the regular season. The 31-year-old also racked up 112 receptions for his first season with 100-plus catches since 2009 -- and fourth overall -- but finished with just four touchdowns. Johnson will be 32 when the season kicks off and is pretty much the only receiving threat on the Texans and still has a small injury stigma floating over him. But because he's such a fantastic talent owners probably shouldn't resist him as a low-end No. 1 Fantasy receiver worth a pick in Round 3.

Bye 5

Calvin Johnson, Lions

You already know that Calvin Johnson is the best Fantasy receiver out there after scoring 16 touchdowns in 2011 and setting an NFL record with 1,964 receiving yards in 2012. But just how good is he? Johnson has posted back-to-back seasons with at least 200 Fantasy points. When compared against running backs he would have finished as the sixth-best in 2012 and the third-best in 2011. He's posted at least 10 Fantasy points in 23 of his last 32 regular-season games. He's overcome injuries that have looked bad to play like a super-human. And the icing on the cake is that nothing about his game, his quarterback, his offense, his playcaller or his workload will change in 2013. That's why Johnson is the only non-running back who qualifies as a first-round pick this summer. We'd look to nab him late in Round 1 with the idea of pairing him with a running back in Round 2.

Bye 9

Charles Johnson, Packers

The Packers selected Grand Valley State receiver Charles Johnson in April's draft. Johnson is your typical height/weight/speed prospect as he's 6-foot-2 with lots of explosion and a sub-4.4 in the 40-yard dash but played at three different schools, a red flag to be sure. But a good camp could lead to some (very) limited playing time this year. He's not worth drafting in a seasonal league but is worth a late pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a middle-round pick in rookie-only drafts.

Bye 4

Damaris Johnson, Eagles

Damaris Johnson will continue to be a reserve receiver for the Eagles this year. As a rookie in 2012, Johnson had 19 catches for 256 yards and three carries for 12 yards. Since he plays behind DeSean Jackson, Jeremy Maclin and Jason Avant, he won't see many targets. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 12

Nick Johnson, Rams

Nick Johnson will compete for a roster spot this year as a reserve receiver for the Rams. Even if he makes the final roster, he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 11

Ronald Johnson, Eagles

Ronald Johnson will try to earn a roster spot with the Eagles this season, but he has minimal Fantasy value even if he makes the final team as a reserve receiver. Johnson missed the 2012 season with a dislocated left ankle. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

WIDE RECEIVER (CONT.)

Steve Johnson, Bills

Despite poor quarterback play, a commitment to the run game and a general lack of talent around him, all Steve Johnson does is produce. In 2012 he had 79 catches for 1,046 yards and six touchdowns and now has at least 76 catches, 1,004 yards and six touchdowns in each of the past three seasons. The Bills have vowed to upgrade at quarterback this offseason, and they did by drafting rookie E.J. Manuel and signing Kevin Kolb, which should help Johnson even though he did well with Ryan Fitzpatrick. But you have to wonder if an improved quarterback will make Johnson even better, and we consider him a low-end No. 2 receiver in 2013. He is worth drafting with a mid-round pick, and even though he's not a dynamic receiver he did post seven games with double digits in Fantasy points last season. Those stats are hard to overlook.

Donald Jones, Free Agent

Donald Jones is looking for a job after he was released by the Patriots this offseason, who acquired him from Buffalo. He's never been a big stat producer with 82 catches for 887 yards and six touchdowns in his career with the Bills, and he missed the final three games in 2012 with an unknown medical condition. Keep an eye on where he lands, but Jones isn't worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Jacoby Jones, Ravens

We saw Jacoby Jones become a postseason superstar with dashing catches to put the Ravens ahead of the Broncos and 49ers, but does it mean he'll take a bow in Fantasy in 2013? For years Jones has teased us of being a potential sleeper, but he's never had more than even 600 yards receiving in a year and only once caught six touchdowns in a campaign (he had one regular-season receiving touchdown last year before hauling in two in the postseason). Bottom line: You're taking a risk putting Jones on your dance card even if the Ravens plan to up his playing time. He's been given opportunities before and he's waltzed into oblivion with them. The good news for Jones is Anquan Boldin is gone, and Dennis Pitta (hip) is out for the year. That could make him worth a late-round flier in deeper leagues.

James Jones, Packers

James Jones might be the most underrated Fantasy receiver out there this summer. All he did last year was lead NFL receivers in touchdowns with 14, pick up career-highs in catches (64) and yards (784) and finish with nine games with 10-plus Fantasy points in standard-scoring leagues (tied for fourth-best). He also continued to serve as a monster in the red zone, cashing in 11 of 14 catches (19 targets) for touchdowns in the regular season. And he played in 91.5 percent of snaps for the Packers, according to Pro Football Focus. Jones should further benefit this year as the Packers thin out their receiving corps, giving him a chance to land more targets. An August injury to Jordy Nelson helps his early-season appeal. He's in a contract year, so a big season should net him some guaranteed bricks of cash. We love this under-the-radar receiver. If you're the type of Fantasy owner who loves to load up on running backs early, expect Jones to be available in Rounds 6 or 7 as a borderline No. 2/No. 3 receiving threat.

Bye 12

Roddy White, Falcons

Like teammate Roddy White, Julio Jones finished as a top-12 receiver in 2012, and he'll aim to do it again in 2013. Jones turned out to be slightly more consistent than his teammate, registering at least 10 Fantasy points (standard scoring) in nine games. While White tended to put up his big numbers indoors, Jones played great outdoors, posting at least 10 points in each of six outdoor matchups. Playing indoors didn't necessarily hurt Jones, but White's production inside domes did as the two only had three games all year where they were both satisfactory. While that's something to think about, the reality is that Jones is the more scintillating receiver in Atlanta and the one Fantasy owners should target first. Like White, Jones is a No. 1 Fantasy wideout worth a pick between 15th and 30th overall.

Bye 6

Marvin Jones, Bengals

Marvin Jones will battle for playing time in training camp this summer. With a good showing he could jump into the mix at receiver for the Bengals but probably not as a full-timer. Feel free to keep an eye on him but we like the prospects of Mohamed Sanu over Jones at this point. Jones is best left to the later rounds of deep dynasty/keeper league drafts.

Bye 12

Jermaine Kearse, Seahawks

Jermaine Kearse will compete for a roster spot with the Seahawks. Keep an eye on his progress in training camp, but he has minimal Fantasy value if he makes the final roster. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Bye 12

Jeremy Kerley, Jets

Here's some good trivia for you. Ask anyone who led the Jets in catches in 2012, and see if they can guess Jeremy Kerley. That's right, Kerley was the No. 1 receiver for the Jets last year with 56 catches for 827 yards and two touchdowns. This year, Kerley is entering his third season, and he could be in line for a breakout performance. The Jets need to improve their quarterback situation, but the addition of Marty Mornhinweg as offensive coordinator should help the passing game as a whole. Don't draft Kerley in the majority of leagues, but if you're looking for a late-round flier in deeper formats then give Kerley a chance. And he could be someone to add off the waiver wire once the season starts if he plays as expected.

Bye 10

Tavarres King, Broncos

The Broncos drafted Georgia wide receiver Tavarres King in the fifth round of the NFL Draft, and he's expected to provide depth for Denver this season. The Broncos have Demaryius Thomas, Eric Decker and Wes Welker on the roster, so King would be No. 4 at best. King, 6-1 and 200 pounds, made 136 catches for 2,602 yards during his college career -- an impressive 19.1 yards per catch. He has been clocked electronically at 4.47 seconds in the 40-yard dash. He is not someone to draft in seasonal leagues, but consider him with a late-round selection in dynasty formats.

Brandon LaFell, Panthers

It's been baby steps for Brandon LaFell, raising his game incrementally over the past three seasons. His 44 catches for 677 yards and four touchdowns in 2012 were all career highs, narrowly ahead of the 36 catches for 613 yards and three scores he had in 2011. More was expected, but perhaps this is the year for those expectations to happen. LaFell will enter a contract year this season and could pick up a big pay day if he plays well. He'll also attempt to improve on the five games with at least 10 Fantasy points he had over 11 games before a December injury slowed him down. Envision yourself picking up LaFell in the late rounds in drafts this summer.

Greg Little, Browns

For two years, Greg Little's been the receiver with plenty of opportunities but not plenty of stats. Hopefully his third year is the charm. Little played regularly for the Browns, starting every game in 2012, but his numbers weren't impressive. He caught 53 of 91 targets for 647 yards and four touchdowns. Little has caught 53.8 percent of his career targets for 11.9 yards per catch. That's not a great total over 32 games. With the Browns' new aggressive offense being installed this offseason there's some faint hope for a big year from Little, but it's tough to count on. Don't draft Little unless it's as a reserve option with a late pick.

Brandon Lloyd, Free Agent

Brandon Lloyd is looking for a new team this offseason after he was released by the Patriots in March. His best days might be behind him after he struggled in 2012 despite playing with Tom Brady and for an offensive coordinator he followed around from Denver to St. Louis to New England in Josh McDaniels. Lloyd finished with 74 catches for 911 yards and four touchdowns. He managed just five games with double digits in Fantasy points despite getting 131 targets, which made him among the Top 20 most-targets receivers. We can only see Lloyd going down from here. Keep an eye on where he ends up, but Lloyd should still be a Fantasy reserve. Depending on his quarterback and his role, Lloyd will be worth a late-round flier in most leagues.

Ricardo Lockette, 49ers

Ricardo Lockette will compete for a roster spot with the 49ers during training camp, but he has minimal Fantasy value even if he makes the team. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 4

Jeremy Maclin, Eagles

Eagles receiver Jeremy Maclin was set up for a big season in 2013. He was entering a contract year and looking forward to playing for new coach Chip Kelly. Unfortunately, Maclin might never get that chance. He suffered a torn ACL in the early part of training camp and will be lost for the season. The Eagles could decide to bring him back next year, but he could also test the free agent market. He is not worth drafting in redraft leagues this season, but owners in dynasty formats should hold onto Maclin. He has been good but not great with 22 touchdowns in his past three years with at least 63 catches a year over that span. But Maclin has never reached 1,000 receiving yards, and now he has to come back from a serious knee injury. Still, if he returns to form as expected, he could be a useful No. 3 receiver in 2014 depending on where he's playing.

Bye 12

Jeff Maehl, Texans

Jeff Maehl will battle for a roster spot in camp with the Texans this summer. He's not expected to put up many stats so leave him off Fantasy rosters.

Bye 8

Brandon Marshall, Bears

For the first time since the days of Marcus Robinson, the Bears had a receiver Fantasy owners could trust. Brandon Marshall's reunion with Jay Cutler in The Windy City resulted in career-highs in catches (118, on 193 targets!), yards (1,508) and touchdowns (11). He was one of four receivers to land at least 10 Fantasy points in 10 or more games. And he kept a personal streak of six straight seasons with at least 1,000 yards alive. Minor hip surgery this season won't slow him down - he said in April he was 100 percent healthy. You pretty much know what you're getting with Marshall, making him one of the safest picks you can make in Round 3 on Draft Day as a No. 1 wideout.

Bye 8

Charly Martin, Seahawks

Charly Martin will compete for a roster spot with the Seahawks. Keep an eye on his progress in training camp, but he has minimal Fantasy value if he makes the final roster. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Bye 12

Keshawn Martin, Texans

Second-year receiver Keshawn Martin is likely to keep a role as a kick returner and work sparingly on offense. Martin's a speedster though you wouldn't know it from his first-year receiving stats (85 yards on 10 catches with a touchdown). You would know it from his kick- and punt-return numbers as he averaged 23.9 yards per kick return and 12.1 yards per punt return. Martin is too valuable to pull from special teams, thus reducing his potential role on offense. It's probably for the best you only draft him late in leagues that reward special-teams yardage.

WIDE RECEIVER (CONT.)Ruvell Martin, Free Agent

Ruvell Martin is a free agent this offseason, and he is not expected to return to Buffalo after playing there in 2012. He had four catches for 41 yards, and he has minimal Fantasy value. Keep an eye on where he signs, but he should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Mohamed Massaquoi, JaguarsBye 9

The Jaguars are taking a chance on Mohamed Massaquoi filling up their depth chart this summer. He signed with them in early April. Massaquoi had seven touchdowns and four concussions in four seasons with the Browns and has never reliably been helpful for Fantasy. He's going to need a lot of playing time, targets and luck for Fantasy owners to like him this season. He should go undrafted.

Rishard Matthews, DolphinsBye 6

Rishard Matthews will compete for a roster spot with the Dolphins in 2013, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve receiver. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Dexter McCluster, ChiefsBye 10

Dexter McCluster has yet to establish himself as an asset to Fantasy owners, but this might be the year he breaks out. He is entering the final year of his rookie contract, so he has the motivation of a new deal. And the addition of new coach Andy Reid should help McCluster make the most of his talents. Keep in mind Reid has done well with small, fast receivers (think DeSean Jackson), and McCluster is coming off his best season in 2012 with 52 catches for 452 yards and one touchdown. He also added 12 carries for 70 yards. We don't recommend drafting McCluster in the majority of leagues, but he is someone to monitor in training camp. If it looks like he's starting to take on a big role then he might be worth a late-round flier.

Marvin McNutt, EaglesBye 12

Marvin McNutt will try to earn a roster spot with the Eagles this season, but he has minimal Fantasy value even if he makes the final team as a backup receiver. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Robert Meachem, ChargersBye 8

Robert Meachem was among the biggest busts in 2012, and he might struggle to contribute again this year. Meachem had the chance to be the No. 1 receiver for the Chargers last season. Instead he had a miserable season with 14 catches for 207 yards and two touchdowns. He had nine games without a catch and six games without a target. This year, Meachem would be the No. 5 receiver at best for the Chargers behind Danario Alexander, Malcom Floyd, Vincent Brown and Keenan Allen. We'd like to see Meachem step up and play at a high level this year, but we don't know if he's going to get the chance to make a significant contribution. Ignore Meachem in all leagues on Draft Day.

Kerry Meier, FalconsBye 6

Kerry Meier will compete for a spot along the receiving depth chart in Atlanta this summer. He'll likely need one of the two top receivers to get hurt to have even a glimmer of hope of being useful in Fantasy, so don't draft him.

Aaron Mallette, RavensBye 8

The Ravens drafted Elon receiver Aaron Mellette, adding to their group of wideouts. Mellette has good size (6-foot-3, 217 pounds) but doesn't have great speed and is a mediocre route-runner who hasn't played against much top competition. Minimal stats are expected -- he's only worth a late pick in dynasty/keeper league drafts and rookie-only drafts.

Carlton Mitchell, BuccaneersBye 5

Carlton Mitchell will compete for a roster spot with the Bucs this year but has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day even if he makes the final roster.

Denarius Moore, RaidersBye 7

Denarius Moore has two things going for him this season. He's the clear-cut No. 1 receiver for the Raiders with Darrius Heyward-Bey and Brandon Myers gone, and he's entering his third season in the NFL, which could lead to a breakout performance. Moore played well in 2012, which is something to build off. He finished the year with 51 catches for 741 yards and seven touchdowns, but he never materialized as a must-start Fantasy option. Part of the problem was he scored six of his seven touchdowns in his first 11 games, and he had only one 100-yard outing. But Moore now has the chance to shine this year, and he does have 12 receiving touchdowns to start his career, which shows he knows how to score. Moore will likely be a late-round selection in the majority of leagues, and he has the potential to have a breakout season. Put him on your draft list, and if he's still there after Round 10 then consider him a steal.

Lance Moore, SaintsBye 7

Not many people get excited about drafting Lance Moore in Fantasy, but they should - especially once the draft is more than halfway over. Moore is coming off his first 1,000-yard season, and that follows up two years with at least eight touchdowns (he had just six in 2012). He led all Saints receivers with seven 10-plus-point Fantasy games and just six games with under 80 receiving yards (Marques Colston had eight). What's nice about Moore is that he gets single coverage pretty much all the time thanks to Colston and Jimmy Graham warranting more defensive attention. That makes him an appealing target for Drew Brees to throw to. There's truth to the perception that Moore isn't as effective outdoors as he is indoors but the Saints play 10 of 16 games in domes this season, making Moore a potential start more often than not. Don't be shy to take Moore with a pick in Round 9 in standard leagues and Round 8 in PPR formats as he has No. 3 receiver potential.

Marlon Moore, 49ers

Marlon Moore signed with the 49ers this offseason, and he will look to earn a role with San Francisco after playing with the Dolphins last year. He has minimal Fantasy in the majority of leagues. He finished 2012 with six catches for 116 yards and one touchdown, and he now has just 12 catches for 244 yards and two touchdowns in three years. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Joseph Morgan, Saints

There's some hope for Joseph Morgan to develop into a decent contributor for the Saints in 2013. With New Orleans likely saying farewell to Devery Henderson this offseason, Morgan could step into the third receiver role and pick up a decent amount of playing time. Morgan was a big-play threat for the Saints last year, catching 10 passes for a ridiculous 379 yards and three touchdowns. Eight of his catches went for more than 20 yards and four of those went for more than 40 yards. With more playing time, those wild stats will have a chance to go even higher. He's worth a late-round flier in deeper leagues.

Josh Morgan, Redskins

Josh Morgan is a starting receiver for the Redskins, but he has minimal Fantasy value. In 2012, his first in Washington, Morgan had 48 catches for 510 yards and two touchdowns. He's never had more than three touchdowns in a season or more than 700 yards. He's also dealing with injuries to his hands and ankle but is expected to be fine for the start of the season. Still, he has marginal upside for Fantasy owners and should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Randy Moss, Free Agent

Randy Moss' return to the NFL in 2012 was a successful one -- sort of. Moss helped the 49ers reach the Super Bowl, and he proved he could be a good teammate. He just didn't produce at a high level. Moss finished the season with 28 catches for 434 yards and three touchdowns. He had just two games with double digits in Fantasy points, and he looked like a 36-year-old receiver who sat out for a season. Now, if you ask Moss, he'll tell you he's still the best receiver of all time, but right now he's out of a job. We'll see if a team gives him a chance to play again this year, and in the right scenario he could be worth a late-round flier. But as we've seen, Moss' best days are probably behind him, and he's not worth drafting in most formats.

Bye 9

Santana Moss, Redskins

Santana Moss was expected to be phased out of the offense in 2012 when the Redskins brought in Pierre Garcon and Josh Morgan, but instead Moss remained productive in a limited role. Garcon was injured for a good portion of the season, and Morgan was inconsistent. It allowed Moss to catch 41 passes for 573 yards and eight touchdowns. It was the second year in a row Moss had fewer than 50 catches and 600 yards, but the eight touchdowns were the third-highest total of his career. He had at least eight Fantasy points in six games, and he was a good bye-week replacement in deeper leagues. Expect Moss to play in a similar capacity this season, and he's someone to monitor off the waiver wire. As long as Robert Griffin III is 100 percent healthy to start the season, we could see Moss again be a helpful contributor in deeper leagues.

Bye 5

Louis Murphy, Giants

Receiver Louis Murphy signed with the Giants this offseason and will battle for a spot along the depth chart this summer. Last year he was shipped from Oakland to Carolina and he caught 25 passes for 336 yards and a touchdown in 2012. After some flashes his rookie year Murphy has yet to develop into anything more than a role player and could have a hard time escaping that stigma. Don't plan on drafting him.

Bye 9

David Nelson, Browns

David Nelson signed with the Browns this offseason, and he's expected to compete for a role in their receiving corps. Nelson suffered a torn ACL in Week 1 in 2012, so he has to show his knee is 100 percent. Nelson was looking like a third-year breakout in 2012 since he had been heading in the right direction his first two years with 31 catches for 353 yards and three touchdowns as a rookie in 2010 and 61 catches for 658 yards and five touchdowns in 2011. If he returns at 100 percent he could end up producing, but it will depend on his role Cleveland, where he could play in the slot and be the No. 3 option behind Josh Gordon and Greg Little. Don't draft Nelson in the majority of leagues, but he is someone to monitor in case he gets off to a good start. Then you can add him off the waiver wire.

Jordy Nelson, Packers

Fantasy owners might have to make a tough call on Packers receiver Jordy Nelson in drafts, though they won't have to do it as early as they did in 2012. Nelson found out in early August that he will undergo knee surgery and be out for 4-6 weeks. His availability for Week 1 is in question, but Nelson should be fine for the majority of the year barring a setback. He projects as a low-end No. 2/high-end No. 3 Fantasy receiver coming into the year. Since he battled injuries in 2012 and with his latest knee problem there's some risk involved with drafting him as a starter, but he has the potential for 65-plus catches, 1,200-plus yards and double digits in touchdowns like he reached in 2011. He also plays in a dynamic passing offense with a superstar at quarterback in Aaron Rodgers. And prior to last year he played 16 games in consecutive seasons. Nelson is definitely worth drafting in all leagues by Round 6 or 7.

Jamar Newsome, Chiefs

Jamar Newsome will compete for a role in Kansas City's receiving corps and work on special teams. Even if he makes the final roster he would not be worth drafting in the majority of leagues. In 2012 he had five catches for 73 yards and no touchdowns.

Hakeem Nicks, Giants

Hakeem Nicks is expected to rebound this season after an injury-plagued year in 2012. While Nicks played in 13 games last season, he was limited by knee and foot injuries and finished with just 53 catches for 692 yards and three touchdowns, with his yards and touchdowns career lows. He is capable of much more when healthy, and he could easily return as a Top 20 Fantasy receiver. Keep in mind before last year he had consecutive seasons of at least 76 catches, 1,050 yards and seven touchdowns with 18 total touchdowns over that span. But if he continues to be limited by knee and foot problems then his value will continue to drop. We'd still take a chance on Nicks with a pick in Round 4 or 5, and hopefully he can bounce back to play like an elite Fantasy receiver once again.

Jordan Norwood, Browns

Jordan Norwood hopes to finally show what he can do after two seasons of limited reps. He followed a faint 2011 with only two games of action in 2012 before a foot injury sidelined him. We wouldn't draft Norwood but would recommend keeping him on your radar if you're in a very deep PPR league.

Bye 4

Ben Obomanu, Jets

Ben Obomanu signed with the Jets in May, and he will compete for a roster spot. He was previously with the Seahawks for the past seven years. In 2012, Obomanu was placed on injured reserve in Week 9 with a wrist injury. But before that he had just four catches for 58 yards. Obomanu has been a serviceable receiver for Seattle for the past seven years, but he's never been great for Fantasy owners. Keep an eye on his role if he makes the final roster for the Jets, but he should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Kevin Ogletree, Cowboys

If the only NFL game you ever watched was the Cowboys at the Giants in Week 1 of the 2012 season you would have thought Kevin Ogletree was the best receiver in league history. He dominated in that game with eight catches for 114 yards and two touchdowns on 11 targets. But his season went downhill from there. Ogletree finished with 32 catches for 436 yards and four touchdowns. He left the Cowboys this offseason to sign with the Bucs, and he will compete to be the No. 3 receiver behind Vincent Jackson and Mike Williams. We wouldn't be surprised if Ogletree has another big game at some point this season, but we also know he'll disappear soon after. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Kassim Osgood, 49ers

The 49ers signed receiver Kassim Osgood in June. He is expected to compete for a roster spot, and if he makes the final team he will contribute on special teams and possibly in the passing game on a minimal basis. He has limited Fantasy value and is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Roscoe Parrish, Free Agent

Roscoe Parrish will try to find a place to play in 2013 after splitting his season in San Diego and Tampa Bay. He'll have a hard time returning to a prominent role on the field for an offense. Keep him off of Fantasy rosters.

Cordarrelle Patterson, Vikings

The Vikings traded up to take Tennessee wide receiver Cordarrelle Patterson with the 29th selection overall in the NFL draft. Patterson is considered to be among the most potential-laden receivers in the draft thanks to his big size (6-foot-2, 216 pounds) and speed (4.33 in the 40-yard dash). He came to the Volunteers in 2012 as one of the top junior college prospects in the nation after setting 13 program records during his time at Hutchinson Community College in Kansas. He proceeded to put together a first-team All-SEC coaches selection resume in 2012 after becoming the first NCAA player since 2008 to record a touchdown four different ways in the same since. Patterson set an SEC single-season record with a combined kickoff and punt return average of 27.6 yards, and set a Tennessee record with 1,858 all-purpose yards. Patterson caught 46 passes for 778 yards and five touchdowns on offense last year. There is no doubt that he is a raw talent but the upside for him is very much Randy Moss-like, though he's a little thicker than Moss but just as fast. Look for the Vikings to work hard with him on his route running and technique. The better news is that there isn't much talent in front of him on the Minnesota depth chart so the opportunities should roll in rather quickly. The risk-reward proposition of Patterson makes him worth a late pick in seasonal leagues, a mid- to late-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a Top 20 pick in rookie-only drafts.

Bye 5

Quinton Patton, 49ers

The 49ers drafted receiver Quinton Patton in the fourth round of the NFL Draft out of Louisiana Tech. Patton will likely be No. 4 or 5 on the depth chart for the 49ers behind Michael Crabtree, Anquan Boldin, A.J. Jenkins and Mario Manningham when healthy. Patton has minimal Fantasy value in seasonal leagues, but he could eventually replace Boldin down the road. Ignore Patton in most standard formats, but he is worth a late-round pick in rookie-only leagues.

Bye 9

Austin Pettis, Rams

Austin Pettis is entering the third year of his career, which is typically when receivers have a breakout campaign. We'll see if it happens for Pettis, but he's low on the depth chart behind Chris Givens, Brian Quick, Tavon Austin and Stedman Bailey. Pettis has had minimal production so far in his career with 57 catches for 517 yards and four touchdowns in two seasons. He could post quality production this season, but he is not worth drafting in most leagues. Let him prove himself first, but if he starts out the season playing well then add him off the waiver wire.

Bye 11

Kealoha Pilares, Panthers

Kealoha Pilares caught two passes - one for a 36-yard touchdown on a screen pass at Atlanta in Week 5 - to make up his 2012 season. Pilares will likely work on special teams and sparingly as a receiver: until that changes, Fantasy owners shouldn't touch him.

Bye 4

Royce Pollard, Jets

Royce Pollard is hoping to make the final roster for the Jets as a reserve wide receiver. Even if he makes the team he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 10

DeVier Posey, Texans

DeVier Posey is a question mark to begin the season on-time after he tore his Achilles in a mid-January playoff game and is still rehabbing. He's a candidate for the Physically Unable to Perform list to begin the year. It's too bad because he totaled nine catches for 134 yards (14.9 avg.) before getting hurt. Until he's back and seeing regular playing time Fantasy owners should pass on him.

Bye 8

Taylor Price, Jaguars

Taylor Price will try to make the Jaguars' final roster this summer. Though he has some speed, he's never been a reliable player in the offense. We wouldn't draft Price.

Bye 9

Brian Quick, Rams

Brian Quick had a disappointing rookie season in 2012, but he will look to improve in his sophomore campaign this year. Last season, Quick was limited to 11 catches for 156 yards and two touchdowns. But with Danny Amendola and Brandon Gibson gone as free agents this offseason, we could see Quick get an expanded role. The Rams added rookies Tavon Austin and Stedman Bailey, but Quick will remain a starter opposite Chris Givens. He has a lot to prove before Fantasy owners can trust him, but based on need, he could be worth a late-round flier in deeper formats. He has a lot of potential, but Fantasy owners need to see him perform on the field, which will hopefully happen this season.

Bye 11

Raymond Radway, Rams

Raymond Radway will compete for a roster spot this year as a reserve receiver for the Rams. Even if he makes the final roster, he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 11

Rueben Randle, Giants

Rueben Randle has the chance to play a prominent role this year with the Giants as the No. 3 receiver behind Hakeem Nicks and Victor Cruz. With Nicks' injury history, Randle could turn into a nice sleeper. The Giants have relied on three receivers for most of Eli Manning's tenure, but that role was empty last season after Mario Manningham left as a free agent. Randle didn't do much as a rookie in 2012 with 19 catches for 298 yards and three touchdowns, but the bulk of that production came in Week 17 when he had four catches for 58 yards and two scores against the Eagles. We hope that's a sign of things to come, and Randle is worth a late-round flier in most formats. If he does go undrafted then keep an eye on him in case he starts off the season playing well because then he would be worth adding off the waiver wire.

Bye 9

David Reed, Ravens

David Reed will battle for playing time in training camp this summer. But until he lands regular playing time, Fantasy owners shouldn't bother with him.

WIDE RECEIVER (CONT.)Sidney Rice, Seahawks*Bye 12

In 2012, Seahawks receiver Sidney Rice played 16 games for the first time since 2009, but that didn't guarantee him a successful year. In fact, Rice was kind of a bust. He had 50 catches for 748 yards and seven touchdowns, way short of the last time he played a full season, which was with the Vikings, when he had 83 catches for 1,312 yards and eight touchdowns. Rice still has the potential to be a starting-caliber Fantasy receiver, but a mysterious trip to Switzerland in late July to have a "preventative" procedure on his knee according to coach Pete Carroll raises the red flag on him. Playing without Percy Harvin for much of the year should open up his targets but with no promise of him staying healthy for another 16 games, Rice shouldn't be taken with anything but a mid- to late-round pick as a reserve. We like Golden Tate better in standard and PPR drafts.

Andre Roberts, CardinalsBye 9

Andre Roberts did what a lot of receivers do in their third year - he had a breakout campaign. Roberts stepped up in 2012 to have a career season with 64 catches for 759 yards and five touchdowns, which were all career highs. He had 114 targets and finished as the No. 38 Fantasy receiver in standard leagues. Roberts will likely slide from No. 2 to No. 3 on the depth chart behind Larry Fitzgerald and now Michael Floyd, but Roberts still has the chance to make plays. He's worth drafting as a late-round flier in deeper leagues, and maybe his third year is the start of something big.

Aldrick Robinson, RedskinsBye 5

Aldrick Robinson will compete for a role with the Redskins this season, but his production is expected to be limited since Washington has a crowded receiving corps. Keep an eye on his stats early in the year, but he should not be drafted in the majority of leagues. He had just 11 catches for 237 yards and two touchdowns in 2012.

Gerell Robinson, BroncosBye 9

Gerell Robinson will look to make the final roster for the Broncos this year as a reserve receiver. Even if he makes the team he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Laurent Robinson, Free Agent

Laurent Robinson's career is in jeopardy after reportedly suffering four concussions last year with the Jaguars and being released nearly one year to the day after his signing with the team. It remains to be seen if he'll reunite in Dallas or find a home elsewhere but aside from a sensational 2011 with the Cowboys he's been a major bust over his career. Throw in the concussion history and no one should think seriously about drafting him.

Brian Robiskie, LionsBye 9

Brian Robiskie will battle for a roster spot with the Lions in 2013. It's unlikely he'll make a Fantasy impact. Leave him off rosters.

Courtney Roby, Free Agent

Courtney Roby is a free agent this offseason after working as the Saints' kick returner in 2012. Because he's more of a special-teams ace he's an afterthought for Fantasy owners in all leagues.

Jeremy Ross, PackersBye 4

Jeremy Ross will battle for a spot along the depth chart in training camp with the Packers this summer. He's unlikely to make an impact this season, so don't consider him for Fantasy use.

Eddie Royal, ChargersBye 8

Eddie Royal is expected to return to the Chargers this year, but he will have to compete for playing time. San Diego has a loaded receiving corps with Danario Alexander, Malcom Floyd and Vincent Brown as the Top 3 options, and Keenan Allen is now No. 4 on the depth chart. We could see Royal spending time in the slot, but his production wasn't great in 2012, his first with the Chargers, when he had 23 catches for 234 yards and one touchdown in 10 games. Owners in deep PPR leagues should keep an eye on Royal, who has two years in his career with at least 59 catches, but he should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Titus Ryan, JetsBye 10

Titus Ryan is hoping to make the final roster for the Jets as a reserve wide receiver. Even if he makes the team he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Greg Salas, EaglesBye 12

Greg Salas has bounced around from St. Louis to New England to Philadelphia, and he will try to earn a role with the Eagles this season. Salas has just 27 catches for 264 yards in two seasons, and he will be low on the depth chart in Philadelphia. He has some talent, especially as a potential slot receiver, but he has to prove himself first. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Ace Sanders, JaguarsBye 9

The Jaguars selected receiver/kick returner Ace Sanders from South Carolina in April's draft. Sanders has plenty of speed and owns quick feet but not much height (just 5-foot-7) or experience in running all the routes (he did a lot of screens, drag routes and deep bombs in college). He's worth a late-round pick only in deeper rookie-only drafts.

Emmanuel Sanders, SteelersBye 5

Emmanuel Sanders is expected to replace Mike Wallace in the Steelers' starting lineup, though he'll be hard pressed to replace Wallace's production. Wallace posted two years with over 1,100 yards in the last three seasons with at least eight touchdowns in each. Sanders has five touchdowns to his name, scoring just one last year despite being given an opportunity to play more (seven starts). So while Sanders set a career high in receptions (44), yards (626) and average (14.2), he still never made it count in the end zone. He also has yet to register a play good for 40-plus yards, something Wallace was known for. If anything Sanders is worth a late pick in PPR leagues since the potential is there for him to rack up a lot of catches in single coverage this season.

Mohamed Sanu, Bengals

Last November, a decision was clearly made by the Bengals coaching staff to get receiver Mohamed Sanu more involved in the offense. His playing time exploded after being used sparingly and it paid off as he scored in three straight games, all wins. Then he broke his foot in late November and is a question mark to be 100 percent healthy for training camp. The second-year player was running as recently as February and planned on participating in unofficial workouts with his teammates in the spring. Sanu has plenty of potential as evidenced by his breakout run last year but the condition of his foot will be a major factor in whether or not he'll get to pick up where he left off. If he's a regular in training camp and even lands a couple of preseason starts then he'd be in the mix as a good reserve receiver with a late-round pick.

Dane Sanzenbacher, Bengals

Dane Sanzenbacher will battle for playing time in training camp this summer. He's a longshot to be a factor in Fantasy play so don't count on him to help out this year.

Chaz Schilens, Free Agent

Chaz Schilens is a free agent this offseason, and the 28-year-old receiver will likely be looking for a job if the Jets don't bring him back as expected. Schilens spent 2012 with the Jets, but he had just 28 catches for 289 yards and two touchdowns. He's never had more than two touchdowns in a year, and his upside is minimal. Keep an eye on where he signs, but Schilens is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Travionte Session, Raiders

Travionte Session will compete for a role in Oakland this season, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve receiver. Even if he makes the final roster, he would not be worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Jordan Shipley, Jaguars

The Jaguars found a niche for Jordan Shipley last season after he bottomed out with the Bengals and Buccaneers last year. Playing in only six games last year in Jacksonville, Shipley had five-plus catches in three of them and scored in the Week-17 finale. Some look at him as a low-rent version of Wes Welker which seemingly gives him some decent Fantasy value but he's someone to wait on. We wouldn't draft him outside the deepest of PPR leagues.

Tyler Shoemaker, Chiefs

Tyler Shoemaker will compete for a role in Kansas City's receiving corps and work on special teams. Even if he makes the final roster he would not be worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Bye 12

Cecil Shorts, Jaguars

Cecil Shorts isn't letting go of his opportunity to be a playmaker in the Jaguars offense after coming alive in Week 7 (after the team's bye week) and playing through to Week 16 before suffering a concussion. Shorts caught 55 passes for 979 yards (17.8 avg.) with seven touchdowns. Though a couple of long touchdowns happened before he got more involved with the offense, his production from Week 7 to Week 16 (10 games) saw him finish with at least 10 Fantasy points in seven outings. That's an excellent model of consistency for owners to note, and that's with a mediocre passer. Shorts can probably be had as a borderline No. 2/No. 3 Fantasy receiver, reducing his risk on Draft Day to a Round-6 selection.

Jerome Simpson, Free Agent

The Vikings had hopes Jerome Simpson would be serviceable as the team's No. 2 receiver in 2012. He was for a handful of plays, but his production left a lot to be desired as he failed to score a single touchdown and racked up 274 yards on 26 catches (52 targets). An early-season suspension didn't help his case. He's a free agent this offseason looking for a place to play but no one should think of him as a reputable Fantasy option.

Matt Slater, Patriots

Matt Slater is a reserve receiver for the Patriots and spends most of his time on special teams. In four seasons he has one catch for 46 yards and only one carry for 6 yards. He should not be drafted in any standard Fantasy formats this season since he's still looking for consistent playing time on offense.

Brad Smith, Bills

Brad Smith is basically useless in standard Fantasy leagues. As a receiver he has 37 catches for 393 yards and three touchdowns in two years with the Bills. He does have 203 rushing yards and two touchdowns over that span, but his main value is in the return game. He had 18 kickoff returns for 496 yards and a touchdown in 2012, so in leagues where return yards count he has value with a late-round pick.

Steve Smith, Panthers

No receiver had as many Fantasy games with 10 or 11 points last season than Steve Smith. Problem is, six of his eight games with double-digit Fantasy points were exactly 10 or 11 points. He still put up enough stats to finish as the 20th best receiver in Fantasy, but that's the expectation you should have for him this summer. Averaging just under five catches per game since Cam Newton took over as the Panthers' quarterback, figure Smith to keep that pace up while still coming through for a pretty good receiving average (he was at 16/1 yards per catch last season). If he can just score more often than the four times he had in 2012, he'll be a Fantasy staple in lineups. And here's a fun fact: Smith hasn't posted consecutive seasons with less than seven touchdowns since 2001-02 (we're throwing out 2004 when he got hurt in Week 1). Smith's age makes him scary - he'll be 34 when the season starts - but he's still worth drafting as a No. 2 receiver, albeit a low-end one, with a pick starting in Round 6.

Bye 9

Bye 10

Bye 12

Bye 4

Torrey Smith, Ravens

Much is expected of Torrey Smith as he enters his third season with the Ravens. His stats have turned out to look similar through two years, getting roughly 50 catches for 850 yards per year with seven touchdowns as a rookie and eight as a sophomore. But now, Smith is expected to carry this receiving corps. With Anquan Boldin moving on to San Francisco, and Dennis Pitta (hip) out for the year, the onus is on Smith to develop into more than just a deep-threat. He could pick up more than the 135 targets he had last year, though he'd have to improve on his 44.4 percent catch rate and six games with 10-plus Fantasy points to become a top 20-option. If you play it safe, you should feel fine taking Smith with a pick around Round 6 as a low-end No. 2 Fantasy option with potential to be much better as the Ravens' most established threat.

Michael Spurlock, Lions

Micheal Spurlock signed with the Lions in June, and he will compete for a spot on the final roster. If he does make the team he likely will land a role as a reserve receiver and play on special teams. In 2012, Spurlock played for the Chargers and had nine catches for 79 yards. His main value was in the return game with 11 punt returns for 188 yards and a touchdown and 10 kickoff returns for 257 yards and a touchdown. In leagues where you get points for returns he could be worth a late-round pick, but owners in standard leagues should pass on Spurlock on Draft Day.

Donte' Stallworth, Redskins

Donte' Stallworth signed with the Redskins in June, and he will compete for a roster spot. He might not make much of an impact in 2013 if 2012 was any indication. Stallworth was cut by the Patriots prior to the season then sat out until New England signed him in December. He had two targets in his lone game against the Texans in Week 14 and caught a 63-yard touchdown, but he suffered an ankle injury on the play and was placed on injured reserve. He will be 32 when the season starts, and his best days are clearly behind him. He should not be drafted in any Fantasy leagues.

Kenny Stills, Saints

The Saints selected Oklahoma receiver Kenny Stills in April's draft. Stills has some wheels -- he ran his 40-yard dash in 4.32 second and has pretty decent height but average size (6-foot-1, 194 pounds). He needs to improve his route running and cut down on mental errors to have a chance to be an elite receiver but could find playing time for the Saints just based on his deep speed. Stills is worth a late pick in deeper dynasty/keeper leagues and a mid-round pick in rookie-only drafts.

Bye 8

Brandon Stokley, Ravens

Brandon Stokley signed with the Ravens in mid-August, giving them a reliable set of veteran hands. Baltimore will likely use Stokley as a part-time slot option, just like he's been for the course of his career. Though he'll be reunited with offensive coordinator Jim Caldwell and catching passes from Joe Flacco, he's not expected to put up much in the way of stats. Last year he had 45 catches for 544 yards and five touchdowns on 58 targets. He'll probably stay around those numbers in 2013, making him mostly irrelevant for Fantasy purposes.

Bye 8

Rod Streater, Raiders

There were times in 2012 when Rod Streater looked like the best receiver in Oakland, and that was as an unheralded rookie. He finished with just 39 catches for 584 yards and three touchdowns, but he had double digits in Fantasy points in three of six games during the middle of the year. He will likely start this year opposite Denarius Moore and is someone to monitor. If he can play like he did for those three games and be more consistent (he had 74 targets) then he would be worth drafting with a late-round pick. There's a lot of optimism for Streater this year now that he has the chance to start.

Bye 7

Sammie Stroughter, Free Agent

A broken foot ended Sammie Stroughter's 2012 season very early, and it could have shipwrecked his career. Stroughter will test free agency and hope to have a team to work with in 2013. He hasn't scored since 2009. You can do better than this - don't add him to your Fantasy roster.

Ryan Swope, Cardinals

The Cardinals drafted receiver Ryan Swope in the sixth round out of Texas A&M. He will compete for a roster spot this season as a reserve receiver. Even if he makes the final roster he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in the majority of leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 9

Brandon Tate, Bengals

After two years with the Bengals it appears as though Brandon Tate's speed will likely be utilized on special teams and not on offense. We'd only recommend a late pick on Tate in deeper leagues that reward special-teams yardage as he has over 2,800 kick-return yards over the last three seasons and over 700 punt return yards over the last two years.

Golden Tate, Seahawks

Pardon the pun but this Seahawks receiver has a “golden” opportunity in 2013. Jokes aside, Golden Tate was a third-year breakout in 2012 who should have the opportunity to turn up his numbers in a contract year in 2013. With the loss of prized offseason acquisition Percy Harvin, Tate should see plenty of playing time and have a shot at being a bigger contributor for the Seahawks. He had 45 catches for 688 yards and seven scores last year as the No. 2 receiver opposite Sidney Rice, catching an incredible 68.8 pct. of the targets thrown his way. With a bump expected, Tate has emerged as a trendy mid- to late-round pick as a quality Fantasy reserve receiver with the caveat that his role might shrink once Harvin comes back from his hip issue late in the season.

Bye 12

Kerry Taylor, Cardinals

Kerry Taylor will compete for a roster spot with the Cardinals this season as a reserve receiver. Even if he makes the final roster he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in the majority of leagues on Draft Day

Bye 9

Demaryius Thomas, Broncos

Demaryius Thomas, as expected, had a breakout campaign in 2012. It was his third year in the NFL, and he was paired with a future Hall of Fame quarterback in Peyton Manning. He led the Broncos with 94 catches for 1,434 yards, and he finished second to fellow third-year breakout Eric Decker (13) with 10 touchdowns. Thomas, who had 141 targets in 2012, has the potential to be a No. 5 Fantasy receiver this year, and he finished just 23 Fantasy points behind Calvin Johnson in 2012. The problem for Thomas in reaching the No. 1 spot is the addition of Wes Welker along with the presence of Decker. Still, we consider Thomas a No. 1 receiver in all leagues, and he’s worth drafting in Round 3. You should consider drafting Thomas among the other second-tier receivers (Johnson is in a tier by himself) like A.J. Green, Dez Bryant, Brandon Marshall and Julio Jones. Once any of those names come off the board, plan on grabbing Thomas in that group.

Bye 9

Devin Thomas, Lions

Devin Thomas came out of “retirement” to sign with the Lions in January. He had left the Bears in August and didn’t play in 2012. Thomas will battle for a spot on the roster. He shouldn’t be considered in Fantasy.

Bye 9

Mike Thomas, Lions

Mike Thomas ended 2012 with the Lions after a trade deadline deal during last season. Between losing his role in Jacksonville and clinging to a limited role in Detroit Thomas totaled 18 receptions for 108 yards and a touchdown. Thomas could be a candidate to play as the Lions’ third receiver to begin 2013 but it’s not appealing enough to warrant Fantasy use. Leave him be.

Bye 9

Kenbrell Thompkins

Kenbrell Thompkins might be this year’s Cinderella story. Signing with the Patriots as an undrafted free agent, the 6-foot-1, 195-pound receiver shot up the depth chart and looks to be a regular player for the Pats offense in 2013. Thompkins has enough speed to work intermediate and long routes but is also a good enough player to run inside slants and cuts, something the Patriots desperately need. After a tumultuous life as a high schooler, football was the catalyst to turn Thompkins’ life around and now he looks poised to be a great sleeper for Fantasy owners. You could do worse with a late-round pick.

Bye 10

Nick Toon, Saints

Nick Toon missed all of 2012 with a foot injury, putting a wet blanket on what could have been a nice first season for the good-hands receiver out of Wisconsin. Toon will battle for playing time in camp this summer and isn’t worth a standard-league draft pick but could come into play late in dynasty/keeper league drafts.

Bye 7

Tiquan Underwood, Buccaneers

Tiquan Underwood worked as the Bucs’ third receiver in 2012, catching 28 passes for 425 yards and a couple of scores. He’s known more for his awesome high top fade than his statistical prowess, so really he should only be on the bench in the deepest of PPR leagues. Most owners shouldn’t draft him.

Bye 5

Mike Wallace, Dolphins

The Steelers’ loss is the Dolphins’ gain after Miami paid handsomely ($27 million guaranteed) for the speedy receiver. Mike Wallace posted his third straight season with at least eight touchdowns in 2012 but failed to record over 1,000 yards for the first time in those three years. Last year also showed a bit of a slowdown for him as he had a career-worst nine catches for 20-plus yards and four catches for 40-plus yards. Playing three games without Ben Roethlisberger’s big arm could have been a contributing factor but the truth is he struggled once he got to the middle of the season: After getting 12-plus Fantasy points in four of his first eight games, Wallace had one game with 10-plus points the rest of the way. A similar slowdown happened in 2011. Now he’s in Miami where he’ll catch passes from second-year quarterback Ryan Tannehill and be the top guy in a crowded yet underwhelming passing attack. We suspect Wallace will have some big weeks, perhaps in the first half of the season, but there’s no way we can trust him to be a reliable Fantasy option. We’d move him into No. 3 WR territory and consider him no sooner than Round 8 on Draft Day.

Bye 6

Kevin Walter, Titans

After Kevin Walter had another season with mediocre statistics, the Texans cut him to save themselves some money against the cap. The Titans took a chance on him, adding him to their deep receiving corps, and it’s there where he’ll battle for playing time. Walter has good size and decent hands but is far from a gamebreaker and appears to be more of a role player than anything else. Walter shouldn’t be a part of Fantasy team.

WIDE RECEIVER (CONT.)Bryan Walters, Seahawks

Bryan Walters will compete for a roster spot with the Seahawks. Keep an eye on his progress in training camp, but he has minimal Fantasy value if he makes the final roster. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Nate Washington, Titans

Nate Washington looks like he'll still start for the Titans, but aside from one season where he acted as their No. 1 receiver, his numbers haven't ever been great. In 2011 Kenny Britt got hurt and Washington stepped up with career-highs across the board. Predictably, Washington sank back into his normal numbers once Britt got healthy for Tennessee; the addition of Kendall Wright didn't help either and the drafting of Justin Hunter could further push Washington out. The vet isn't worth drafting but is worth a look off waivers during the season as either a one-week replacement or for when Britt gets hurt or in trouble -- assuming he's still a key player for the Titans.

Reggie Wayne, Colts

Reggie Wayne finished with the second-most targets of anyone in football last year. He was among the Top 20 receivers in Fantasy points and was one of 20 receivers to have seven-plus games with 10-plus Fantasy points last year. Wayne had exactly 1,355 yards for the second time in three seasons and over 1,000 yards for the eighth time in nine seasons. Not bad for an "old man" playing with a rookie quarterback last season. Wayne will turn 35 in November and Father Time will eventually have his way with him, but as the top target in the Colts' offense and the apple of Andrew Luck's eye, he should continue to stay productive. A lack of touchdown production last year (really the last three years) keeps him out of No. 1 WR consideration but landing him as a No. 2 choice with a pick in Round 5 or 6 should be a simple, safe choice.

Wes Welker, Broncos

Wes Welker made a shocking move this offseason when he left the Patriots and Tom Brady to go to arguably Brady's biggest rival in his career in Peyton Manning with the Broncos. We'll now find out if Welker can thrive in a different system besides the Patriots, but playing with Manning might be the next best thing. Welker was a star in New England since he has five years with at least 100 catches in his past six seasons. He now goes to a Broncos team that has a loaded receiving corps with Demaryius Thomas and Eric Decker, but Welker will still get plenty of targets since Manning loves throwing to the slot. Still, this move hurts Welker slightly. He remains a No. 2 Fantasy receiver in all leagues, but he's not the No. 1 option anymore in this passing attack. Welker should be drafted in Round 4 in standard leagues and Round 3 in PPR formats. He will likely fall short of 100 catches this season, but not by much. Figure on him grabbing 80-85 receptions for 1,300 yards and about five touchdowns. If there was any place we would have liked to see him leave New England for, Denver is it.

Bye 12Ryan Whalen, Bengals

Ryan Whalen will battle for a roster spot in training camp this summer. He played sparingly since entering the league and is a long shot to be a factor in Fantasy leagues in 2013. Keep him off of rosters.

Bye 12Markus Wheaton, Steelers

The Pittsburgh Steelers chose former Oregon State wide receiver Markus Wheaton in the third round of the NFL draft. The 6-foot-1 Wheaton caught 91 passes for 1,244 yards and 11 touchdowns for the Beavers in 2012. The Steelers are in need of depth at receiver after Mike Wallace left for the Miami Dolphins last month. Wheaton also gives the Steelers some versatility. He also ran for 631 yards during his collegiate career with an average of 7.3 yards per carry. The 22-year-old Wheaton will compete with veterans Plaxico Burress and Jericho Cotchery for a spot behind starters Antonio Brown and Emmanuel Sanders. That's a gig he could land and do moderately well in. The Steelers have a track record of drafting fast receivers who make an impact within two years and Wheaton looks as if he could fit the bill. There are some issues surrounding his hands and his willingness to go over the middle but his quickness is what makes him appealing. He's a late-round flier in seasonal leagues, a late-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a middle-round choice in rookie-only drafts.

Bye 5Jordan White, Jets

Jordan White is hoping to make the final roster for the Jets as a reserve wide receiver. Even if he makes the team he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 10Roddy White, Falcons

Despite sharing the field with teammate Julio Jones, Roddy White finished as a top-12 Fantasy receiver for the fifth year in a row in 2012 and aims to do it again in 2013. White saw a dip in targets thanks to Jones and teammate Tony Gonzalez but still finished the regular season with 143, catching 92 of them for 1,351 yards. He stumbled in the touchdown department, catching seven scores -- a four-year low. And when White did shine as a Fantasy performer it was primarily indoors: He had 10-plus Fantasy points seven times in 10 games indoors vs. one game with that total in six games outdoors. That's been consistent with his career and something to remember when looking at White in 2013 drafts since the Falcons are slated for another 10 indoor games this season. Ultimately, White has proven to be a reliable receiver Fantasy owners should have no problem starting on a weekly basis. That makes him a top-12 option on Draft Day worth a pick between 20th and 30th overall, likely within 10 picks of when someone selects Jones.

Bye 6Damian Williams, Titans

Damian Williams looks like he'll serve as a backup on the Titans in 2013. He's got decent size and hands but just doesn't have much of an opportunity to put up numbers like he did for a few weeks back in 2011. Keep him off of Fantasy rosters.

Bye 8

Isaiah Williams, Raiders

Isaiah Williams will compete for a role in Oakland this season, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve receiver. Even if he makes the final roster, he would not be worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Kyle Williams, 49ers

Kyle Williams had a rough year in 2012. He was limited to 11 games because of a torn ACL, and he finished the season with 14 catches for 212 yards and a touchdown. We hope he'll be ready for the start of the season, but even if he does he would have minimal Fantasy value. Keep an eye on Williams and his recovery, but he should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

LaQuan Williams, Ravens

LaQuan Williams will battle for playing time in training camp this summer. But until he lands regular playing time, Fantasy owners shouldn't bother with him.

Mike Williams, Buccaneers

Mike Williams might wind up being one of the best bargains you can sink your teeth into on Draft Day. Playing opposite the more prominent Vincent Jackson, Williams had his third-straight 60-catch season, averaging a career-best 15.8 yards per grab with nine touchdowns. He had as many 10-plus Fantasy point games as Jackson (eight) but did not have as many outings with seven Fantasy points or fewer. Finishing the season strong (28 grabs, 371 yards, four TDs in five December games) helped Williams' stats quite a bit. Seemingly refocused after a down 2011, and entering a contract year, Williams looks like a safe bet to help as a No. 3 receiver worth a pick starting in Round 7.

Terrance Williams, Cowboys

The Cowboys drafted receiver Terrance Williams from Baylor in the third round of the NFL Draft. Williams caught 202 passes for 3,334 yards, averaging 16.5 yards, and 27 touchdowns in a four-year career at Baylor. As a senior, he caught 97 passes for 1,832 yards, averaging 18.9 yards, with 12 touchdowns. He was also a kickoff and punt returner as a sophomore and junior at Baylor. Williams will likely compete to be the No. 3 receiver for the Cowboys behind Dez Bryant and Miles Austin, and he could play right away. Keep an eye on his progress in training camp and the preseason, and he could be worth a late-round pick in deeper seasonal formats. In rookie-only leagues, Williams is worth a mid-round pick because he could be the eventual replacement for Austin.

Mike Willie, Chargers

Mike Willie will try to make the final roster this season with the Chargers. Even if he does land with San Diego out of training camp he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 7

Matt Willis, Free Agent

Matt Willis is a free agent this offseason, and he will look to sign with a team as a reserve receiver and play on special teams. In 2012, Willis was with the Broncos and had 10 catches for 90 yards. Keep an eye on where he ends up, but he should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Bye 9

Marquess Wilson, Bears

The Bears' third-day draft picks included State receiver Marquess Wilson, padding their depth at wideout. Wilson had some major maturity issues in college, once leaving a practice and claiming he was abused by his head coach before recanting. He missed the team's final three games. But he is also 6-foot-3, can run a 4.5 in the 40-yard dash and had a prolific college career (189 catches for 3,207 yards and 23 touchdowns) in three seasons. He's only worth a late pick in dynasty/keeper league drafts and a mid-to-late pick in rookie-only drafts.

Bye 8

Robert Woods, Bills

The Bills drafted receiver Robert Woods in the second round out of Southern California, and he is expected to start right away opposite Steve Johnson. In 2012 for the Trojans, Woods had 76 catches for 846 yards and 11 touchdowns. At 6-foot-1, 201 pounds, Woods is considered a good route runner comparable to Reggie Wayne and Hakeem Nicks. Buffalo revamped their passing game this season with the addition of quarterbacks E.J. Manuel and Kevin Kolb, and Johnson needs help on the other side of the field, which should benefit Woods. Consider Woods a potential sleeper in seasonal leagues, and he's worth at least a second-round pick in rookie-only formats.

Bye 5

Jarius Wright, Vikings

The Vikings leaned on Jarius Wright to help out the offense late last season when Percy Harvin got hurt. Now, they'll need him with Harvin no longer on the team. Though his numbers weren't overly impressive, Wright finished second in target conversion by catching 60 percent of the passes thrown his way, hauling in 24 passes for 323 yards (14.1 avg.) over eight games, including the playoffs. He also scored in a pair of games. There is some potential in Wright, who has good speed and hands, so if an opportunity is there for him he could develop into someone you could take with a late pick in drafts.

Bye 11

Kendall Wright, Titans

Kendall Wright ended his rookie season with a decent amount of playing time but a surprisingly low receiving average -- 9.8 yards per catch. In his senior year at Baylor, he averaged 15.4 yards per grab, so more was expected. The good news is his chances should remain the same if not improved in 2013, his second year in the league. Though his quarterback isn't exactly a machine and he'll still share the field with a pretty good receiving corps, Wright has some good ability and could produce some nice numbers. If you started your season with the youngster on your bench just to see how he does, we wouldn't blame you. Wright's worth a late-round pick.

Bye 12

Bye 5

TIGHT END

Dwayne Allen, Colts

Dwayne Allen played more than 75 percent of the snaps for the Colts as a rookie and was pretty much a regular in the offense by the mid-point of last season. He's expected to earn a heavy amount of playing time in 2013 though it doesn't mean he'll be productive enough for Fantasy. Allen caught just 45 passes last season, though 28 of them came in the final nine games of the year when he started to play more frequently. But only one of his three scores came during that span. Allen is a good player for the Colts but let's not confuse him for one of the best tight ends in Fantasy. You're better off going in another direction on Draft Day.

David Ausberry, Raiders

David Ausberry will compete for a role as the starting tight end in Oakland this season, but he has minimal Fantasy value. Even if he wins the job he would not be worth drafting in the majority of leagues. He had seven catches for 92 yards in 2012, and the Raiders added two tight ends in the NFL Draft with Nick Kasa and Mychal Rivera.

Billy Bajema, Free Agent

Billy Bajema will compete for a roster spot in training camp somewhere this summer. Because he's not expected to put up much in the way of stats, Fantasy owners should ignore him.

Josh Baker, Jets

Josh Baker is hoping to make the final roster for the Jets as a reserve tight end. Even if he makes the team he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Jake Ballard, Patriots

Patriots tight end Jake Ballard will compete for a roster spot this season, and his fate could be tied to the health of Rob Gronkowski (back). Ballard was the Giants top tight end in 2011 with 38 catches for 604 yards and four touchdowns, but he suffered a torn ACL in the Super Bowl and was cut in the offseason. The Patriots picked him up, and after sitting out the 2012 season, he is ready to return. If Gronkowski is healthy then Ballard might not make the final roster. But if Gronkowski is limited with his back then Ballard could be his replacement. Either way, Ballard isn't worth drafting in the majority of leagues. At best he'll be a place holder until Gronkowski returns.

Gary Barnidge, Browns

Gary Barnidge reunited with Rob Chudzinski in Cleveland where he'll battle for playing time this summer. He is known for his blocking but not his receiving. He had just 78 yards receiving and a touchdown in 2012. Because he's not expected to post much in the way of stats, Fantasy owners can pass on him.

Bye 8

Bye 7

Bye 10

Bye 10

Bye 10

Martellus Bennett, Bears

Martellus Bennett left the Giants this offseason to sign with the Bears on a four-year deal. He is coming off a career season in New York with 55 catches for 626 yards and five touchdowns, and he should be a featured part of the offense in Chicago. Bennett, a noted blocker, finally got increased playing time with the Giants and was able to showcase his skills, and Fantasy owners realized he's a playmaker. He should be able to connect with Jay Cutler and play at a high level with the Bears, and we consider him a low-end No. 1 Fantasy option. He's worth drafting in Round 8 or 9 in the majority of leagues.

Kevin Boss, Free Agent

The Chiefs released Kevin Boss this offseason, and he will look for a job, most likely as a reserve tight end and a special teams contributor. Boss had a down year in 2012 with just three catches for 65 yards and a touchdown in just two games before suffering a head injury, which kept him out for the rest of the season. Keep an eye on where he ends up, but he has minimal Fantasy value and should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Kevin Brock, Chiefs

Kevin Brock will compete for a role in Kansas City's offense at tight end and work on special teams. Even if he makes the final roster he would not be worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Richie Brockel, Free Agent

Richie Brockel played in every game in 2012 but didn't record a single stat. He probably won't break out to become a Fantasy stud anytime soon. Keep him off of rosters.

Nate Byham, Buccaneers

Nate Byham will compete for a roster spot in training camp his summer. But unless he surprises us all and earns regular playing time, he won't be worth owning in Fantasy. Leave him off rosters.

Jordan Cameron, Browns

Jordan Cameron is a deep sleeper in 2013. He played sparingly in his first two seasons but has the size and ability to be a matchup-crushing tight end for the Browns. He's also going to work with Rob Chudzinski, who has a pretty good history of utilizing tight ends in his offense, and Norv Turner's done the same. This could be the year for the 6-foot-5, 245-pound Cameron, though he's still not quite worth drafting. A good training camp and preseason would change that.

Derek Carrier, Eagles

Derek Carrier will try to earn a roster spot with the Eagles this season, but he has minimal Fantasy value even if he makes the final team as a backup tight end. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

James Casey, Eagles

There's a chance for James Casey to be a surprise in 2013. When free agency opened in March, the Eagles swooped in and signed Casey away from the Texans right away. When the team introduced Casey to the media, coach Chip Kelly referenced Patriots tight end Aaron Hernandez as a mismatch problem for defenses that perhaps Casey could emulate. Casey himself also said part of the reason he signed with the Eagles was to get more playing time. Put the clues together and we might see Casey play regularly in the team's up-tempo offense. Now, he did have offseason knee surgery, which could sideline him into training camp, but he's expected to be fine. As long as he's healthy he should be considered a sleeper candidate at a position thin on talent. In the deepest of leagues he's worth a late-round pick, otherwise he's worth putting on the radar before the season starts.

Mike Caussin, Bills

Mike Caussin will compete for playing time with the Bills in 2013, but his Fantasy value is minimal. He did not have a catch in 2012, and he has just five catches for 41 yards in four years. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Brent Celek, Eagles

Brent Celek will be an interesting Fantasy tight end to keep an eye on this year. He's coming off a down year in 2012 with 57 catches for 684 yards and one touchdown, and the Eagles brought in two new tight ends with James Casey signing as a free agent and rookie Zach Ertz. There's a chance Celek could get cut as a salary cap move, or he could remain the starter. Even if he does start Celek's Fantasy value is now limited. Keep an eye on his role coming into the season, but Celek is a No. 2 Fantasy tight end at best. He's not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Garrett Celek, 49ers

Garrett Celek will compete for a roster spot with the 49ers this season as a reserve tight end. Even if he makes the final roster he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Scott Chandler, Bills

Scott Chandler looks like he's in the process of making a quick recovery from the torn ACL he suffered in Week 16 of 2012. Chandler has proven to be a good No. 2 Fantasy tight end and bye-week replacement. In 2012, he had 43 catches for 571 yards -- both career highs -- and tied a career best with six touchdowns. We hope Chandler can be ready for Week 1, but you'll have to keep an eye on his status; back in late May he was running routes and catching passes without concern. Either way, he is not worth drafting in the majority of standard leagues. Like the past two years, Chandler can end up as a useful bye-week replacement if his knee is OK.

Bye 12

Orson Charles, Bengals

Orson Charles figures to keep serving as the Bengals' second tight end in 2013. He caught eight passes for 101 yards and a touchdown last season. Unless something happens to tight end Jermaine Gresham, don't think about adding him.

Jamie Childers, Giants

Jamie Childers will compete for a roster spot for the Giants this season as a reserve tight end. Even if he makes the final roster he has minimal Fantasy value in the majority of leagues. Ignore him in all formats on Draft Day.

Dallas Clark, Ravens

Dallas Clark landed with the Ravens, reuniting with former coach Jim Caldwell, Baltimore's offensive coordinator. This after the team lost several tight ends to injuries. Clark isn't promised much in terms of playing time but did prove last year he can still be fairly effective, catching 47 passes for 435 yards and four scores with the Buccaneers. At best he'll be a bye-week replacement option for Fantasy owners, nothing more.

Charles Clay, Dolphins

Charles Clay should be fine for the start of the 2013 season following a torn ligament in his right knee in Week 15, but his role is somewhat undefined. At best, he would be the No. 2 tight end behind Dustin Keller, but no one is drafting Clay this year. He played well in 2012 given his limited targets (33) and finished with 18 catches for 212 yards and two touchdowns. He now has five touchdowns in two seasons, and we'd like to see what he can do in a featured role. But there's a reason he hasn't seen more action in his career, and he might not be able to play at a high level. Ignore Clay in all leagues on Draft Day.

Colin Cochart, Cowboys

Colin Cochart will compete for a roster spot with the Cowboys this year but has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day even if he makes the final roster.

Chase Coffman, Falcons

Chase Coffman will battle for a backup tight end job for the Falcons in 2012. Once considered a sleeper prospect out of Mizzou, Coffman will have to overcome long odds to take over as the Falcons' primary tight end. As such, Fantasy owners shouldn't trust him.

Bye 12

Bye 9

Bye 8

Bye 6

Bye 11

TIGHT END (CONT.)Jared Cook, Rams

After trying to get franchise-tagged like a receiver before free agency started, Jared Cook hopes to be utilized like one with the Rams this season. Cook wasn't franchised at all and signed with St. Louis after four years with the Titans. Playing in a prominent role the last two seasons, Cook totaled just seven touchdowns and saw his average dip in 2012 from 15.5 yards per catch to 11.9 yards per catch. But Cook contended he lined up more as a receiver and felt like he was more of a wideout than a tight end. The Titans didn't buy into that, but the Rams seem to think highly of him after giving him the most guaranteed money to a tight end in NFL history. Cook is expected to help anchor a made-over receiving corps and pick up targets he just never saw in Tennessee (81 in 2011, 72 in 13 games in 2012). If you're looking for a tight end to grab late on Draft Day to begin the season with, Cook fits the bill. We have no issue with calling him a borderline low-end No. 1 Fantasy option worth a selection starting in Round 10.

Chris Cooley, Free Agent

Chris Cooley is a free agent this offseason, and his tenure with the Redskins is likely over. Cooley was released prior to last season but re-signed when Fred Davis suffered an Achilles injury. He managed just one catch for 8 yards during the season. Keep an eye on where Cooley ends up if a team takes a chance on him, but his best days are behind him. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Tom Crabtree, Buccaneers

Tom Crabtree signed with the Bucs this offseason and he'll battle for meaningful playing time there. Crabtree had some highlights last year, catching a touchdown on a trick play and rumbling for a 72-yard touchdown on another play, but he never put up good numbers on a consistent basis. Expectations should remain low, taking him out of Fantasy consideration.

Jeff Cumberland, Jets

Jeff Cumberland has the chance to be the No. 1 tight end for the Jets with Dustin Keller gone as a free agent. He played well in 2012 with 29 catches for 359 yards and three touchdowns, but his numbers would have to at least double before Fantasy owners could count on him. Keep an eye on what happens with his status this offseason, but he should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Justice Cunningham, Colts

The Colts selected South Carolina tight end Justice Cunningham in April's draft. Cunningham is a better blocker than receiver and shouldn't be considered even a good Fantasy prospect.

Bye 11Owen Daniels, Texans

Expectations are for Owen Daniels to begin the year as a No. 1 Fantasy tight end. After proving he could be useful with a career-high six touchdowns in 2012 to go with 62 catches and 716 yards, Daniels finds himself in an offense void of elite receiving threats opposite Andre Johnson. Last year he had 128 targets, catching more than 60 percent of them, and this year he might be able to get more because of the Texans' thin receiver corps. It's enough to make Daniels a low-end No. 1 Fantasy tight end worth a middle- to late-round pick, just before the sneaky late-round tight ends start flying.

Fred Davis, Redskins

Fred Davis will return to the Redskins after re-signing with the team as a free agent. Davis is trying to come back from an Achilles injury, which ended his year after Week 7 last season. Davis also has to prove he can mesh with quarterback Robert Griffin III. Davis had 59 catches for 796 yards and three touchdowns in 2011, but he got off to a slow start in 2012 with Griffin as he had just 24 catches for 325 yards and no touchdowns in seven games. He was starting to pick things up before the injury, so hopefully he will start off the season playing well, but he's just a No. 2 tight end coming into the year. On top of his recovery, Griffin is also coming back from knee surgery. And since there are plenty of talented tight ends out there, Davis projects as just a high-end backup. He could turn into a solid injury or bye-week replacement, but let him prove himself first early in the season before adding him off waivers.

Vernon Davis, 49ers

Vernon Davis is expected to take on a bigger role in 2013 than he had in 2012 because of Michael Crabtree (Achilles) going down. For Fantasy owners, that means seeing the Davis from the playoffs show up all year compared to the guy who disappeared once Colin Kaepernick was the starter. Davis finished the regular season last year with 41 catches for 548 yards and five touchdowns. They were easily his worst stats since 2008, the year before his breakout season. Davis struggled to develop a rapport with Kaepernick until the postseason, when Davis took off. In his final two postseason games he had 11 catches for 210 yards and a touchdown against the Falcons and Ravens. We hope he can build on that performance, and Davis is too talented to overlook as anything but a No. 1 Fantasy tight end, especially with the injury to Crabtree. Plan on drafting Davis with a pick in Round 6 or 7.

Ed Dickson, Ravens

Ravens tight end Ed Dickson has the chance for an increased role this season thanks to Dennis Pitta (hip) being lost for the year and Anquan Boldin traded to San Francisco. Joe Flacco likes relying on his tight end, and Dickson now has to prove he can be Baltimore's playmaker in the middle of the field. We don't recommend drafting Dickson in the majority of leagues, but keep him on your radar in deeper formats. He could emerge as a bye-week or injury replacement during the season and be worth adding off the waiver wire.

Bye 8Bye 5*Bye 9*Bye 8

Jim Dray, Cardinals

Jim Dray will compete for playing time with the Cardinals this season, but he has minimal Fantasy value. Through three seasons, Dray has seven catches for 77 yards and no touchdowns. Ignore him in the majority of leagues on Draft Day.

Joel Dreessen, Broncos

Joel Dreessen should be considered a low-end Fantasy option in the majority of leagues on Draft Day. He did well in 2012 as the No. 2 tight end for the Broncos behind Jacob Tamme, but he still posted modest stats at best with 41 catches for 356 yards and five touchdowns. He will again play a prominent role for the Broncos, but he's not a starting-caliber tight end for Fantasy owners as long as he continues to share playing time with Tamme and will now contend with Wes Welker for targets over the middle. Ignore Dreessen in most formats on Draft Day; a knee procedure this offseason doesn't help his cause at all.

Michael Egnew, Dolphins

Michael Egnew will compete to be the No. 2 tight end for the Dolphins at best behind Dustin Keller. Egnew was drafted in the third round of the NFL Draft in 2012 with the hope he would be a receiving tight end, but he failed to catch a pass while being inactive for 14 games. In college at Missouri, Egnew had 137 catches in his final two seasons, so the potential is there, but he has to prove he can make plays at the next level. With the addition of Keller, Egnew is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues. If he starts off the season playing well then add him off the waiver wire.

Tyler Eifert, Bengals

With their first round pick Cincinnati selected Notre Dame tight end Tyler Eifert, considered by many to be the best tight end available in the draft. In three seasons with the Fighting Irish, the 6-foot-5, 250-pound Eifert had 11 touchdowns on 140 catches for 1,840 yards (13.1 avg.). Bengals coaches were tickled to get Eifert for their multiple tight end packages but tempered expectations on Draft Day when they stuck with veteran Jermaine Gresham as their starter, specifically calling Eifert a "backup." That stings because Eifert does have potential to be a difference maker in the stat sheets. Fantasy owners have to keep track of his progress in training camp and get an idea of how frequently the Bengals will use him in two-tight end sets before relying on him as a weekly starter. That leaves Eifert worth a late-round pick in seasonal leagues, a middle- to late-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a Top 20 pick in rookie-only drafts.

Dedrick Epps, Jets

Dedrick Epps is hoping to make the final roster for the Jets as a reserve tight end. Even if he makes the team he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 9

Bye 9

Bye 6

Bye 12

Bye 10

Zach Ertz, Eagles

The Eagles drafted tight end Zach Ertz in the second round of the NFL Draft out of Stanford. Ertz was widely considered the second best tight end in this draft after Notre Dame's Tyler Eifert, who went to the Bengals. Ertz replaced Coby Fleener last year and started all 14 games for the Cardinal in 2012. He finished with a team-high 69 catches for 898 yards and six scores, earning first-team All-Pac 12 and All-American honors. Ertz gives coach Chip Kelly another versatile weapon on offense. He can line up in the slot or out wide with an ability to create separation. Ertz teams with Brent Celek and James Casey to form a potent tight-end corps, but this might limit Ertz's Fantasy value this season. He is not worth drafting in the majority of standard leagues, but he is worth an early-round selection in rookie-only formats.

Gavin Escobar, Cowboys

The Cowboys drafted tight end Gavin Escobar in the second round of the NFL Draft out of San Diego State. He is regarded as a good receiving target but an inconsistent blocker. The 6-5, 254-pounder started 23 games during his 39-game career with San Diego State. He caught 122 passes for 1,646 yards and 17 touchdowns. Last season as a junior, Escobar caught 42 passes for 543 yards and six touchdowns. Escobar should be the No. 2 tight end for the Cowboys behind Jason Witten and might be Witten's eventual successor. He has minimal Fantasy value in seasonal leagues, but he's worth a mid-round pick in rookie-only formats.

Anthony Fasano, Chiefs

Anthony Fasano signed with the Chiefs this offseason, and he will look to play a role in Andy Reid's offense. He will likely share playing time with Tony Moeaki and rookie Travis Kelce, but even if Fasano is considered the starter he still has minimal Fantasy value. Fasano has never posted dominant stats. He had seven touchdowns in 2008, but he hasn't had more than five since. His best yardage total was 528 in 2010, and he set a career high in catches in 2012 with only 41. Fasano is just a No. 2 Fantasy tight end at best. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Daniel Fells, Patriots

Daniel Fells will compete for a roster spot with the Patriots in 2013. He was a reserve in 2012 but saw minimal action in the passing game with four catches for 85 yards. Even if he makes the final roster he should not be drafted in any leagues.

Darren Fells, Seahawks

Darren Fells will compete for a roster spot with the Seahawks. Keep an eye on his progress in training camp, but he has minimal Fantasy value if he makes the final roster. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Jermichael Finley, Packers

Jermichael Finley is sure to be considered a No. 1 Fantasy tight end even though he hasn't done much to prove he deserves it. He scored two touchdowns last year and has 17 over his 64-game career. The 667 yards he had last season were good enough for third-best even though he caught a career-high 61 balls. That's not bad considering he caught three passes or less in half of his regular-season games. And according to Stats, Inc. Finley was charged with seven drops though there was a point where it seemed like he had a bad play every week. He finished tied as the 17th best tight end in standard Fantasy play with the Jaguars' Mercedes Lewis. Obviously, there's potential for him to shine in the NFL, and it might come with another team, but with Finley in a contract year for the second time in three seasons, he's truly at a crossroads in his career. At best, he's a consideration to begin your year as your starting tight end but we'd take him and another high-upside tight end with mid- to late-round picks.

Coby Fleener, Colts

Expectations were high for Coby Fleener after he went with college teammate Andrew Luck to Indianapolis. But now expectations are low after a quiet first year that saw him catch 26 passes in 12 games for 281 yards and a pair of scores. With the tight end position deep with players that carry 800-yard, five-touchdown potential, Fleener doesn't register as a Top-15 option anymore. There's always the chance he surprises in his second year so if you're in a deep draft and you like him, take him late, but there are no promises he'll be as special as we hoped he would be a year ago.

Antonio Gates, Chargers

Most Fantasy owners would be giddy if you told them Antonio Gates, would play 15 games in a season. After missing nine games the previous two years, Gates appeared in 15 games in 2012. But the return to health didn't help his overall production. Gates had 49 catches for 538 yards, which was his worst output since his rookie year in 2003, including the years where he missed time. He scored seven touchdowns, but three of them came in the final three weeks of the season, which was too little too late. The good news is Gates comes into this year at 100 percent, and hopefully the three-game scoring streak will carry into this season. The bad news is he'll be 33 when the season starts, and he might not be the same player following two years of foot problems. Still, he has the potential to be a top 10 Fantasy tight end, and we consider him a No. 1 option. He should be drafted with a pick as early as Round 5 in all formats.

Bye 4

Tony Gonzalez, Falcons

Retirement wasn't in Tony Gonzalez's plans when he agreed to return to the Falcons for his 17th season. Though he's an old man by NFL standards he's coming off a season where he posted his best stats yet with the Falcons, scoring eight touchdowns and catching 93 passes for an even 930 yards. In spite of his age, no one would really be surprised if Gonzalez put up similar numbers in 2013 given his role in the offense and lack of tight coverage thanks to playing with Roddy White and Julio Jones. Gonzalez had fewer targets than those two receivers but still had 139 passes go his way. This all should not change. Gonzalez is worth a pick in Round 6 in standard leagues but might slip a few rounds in long-term formats since he said in early April this will be his last season.

Bye 6

Richard Gordon, Raiders

Richard Gordon will compete for a role in Oakland this season, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve tight end. Even if he makes the final roster he would not be worth drafting in the majority of leagues. He had two catches for 9 yards and a touchdown in 2012.

Bye 7

Chris Gragg, Bills

The Bills selected tight end Chris Gragg in the seventh round of the NFL Draft out of Arkansas. Gragg caught 72 passes for 1,003 yards and seven touchdowns in four years for the Razorbacks. He is more of a receiver than a blocker, and he led all tight ends at the Combine with a 4.50 40-yard dash. Look for Gragg to have to earn a role with the Bills this season, but he has minimal Fantasy value. He should not be drafted in the majority of standard leagues and is only worth a late-round selection in rookie-only formats.

Bye 12

Cameron Graham, Rams

Cameron Graham will compete for a roster spot this year as a reserve tight end for the Rams. Even if he makes the final roster, he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 11

Garrett Graham, Texans

Garrett Graham is expected to roll as the No. 2 tight end in the Texans' offense, a role he's been planning for. That should mean more playing time and targets, but until we see Graham start to make an impact in the Texans' offense, Fantasy owners shouldn't consider him.

Bye 8

Jimmy Graham, Saints

An injured wrist sabotaged Jimmy Graham's third NFL season, but it shouldn't keep him from being an underperformer in 2013. It really didn't keep him from being a disappointment in 2012 either: Despite the injury, Graham still played 15 games and totaled 986 yards on 85 catches with nine touchdowns. Those numbers could have been higher had he played in good health for the final seven weeks of the season. Still, his numbers were good enough to lead all tight ends in Fantasy points last year. Graham's huge size, very good speed and excellent hands with the eyes of an All-Pro quarterback on him at all times make him an elite player for Fantasy purposes. The added bonus of playing in a contract year should further motivate Graham to post nice numbers. We are not at all opposed to taking him with a pick between 15th and 25th overall in standard leagues and 14th and 20th overall in PPR formats.

Ladarius Green, Chargers

Ladarius Green will try to make the final roster this season with the Chargers. Even if he does land with San Diego out of training camp he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Virgil Green, Broncos

Virgil Green will be a reserve tight end for the Broncos this season and has minimal Fantasy value. In two years in the NFL, Green has just eight catches for 87 yards. The Broncos will likely use Green more as a blocker and on special teams. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Jermaine Gresham, Bengals

Jermaine Gresham's stats have trended higher, albeit slightly, over his three year career. He finished as the 13th ranked tight end in Fantasy points in 2011 and the 11th ranked tight end in 2012. But any room for a breakout year could have been squandered when the Bengals drafted tight end Tyler Eifert in April's draft. Immediately following the selection Bengals coaches inferred that Gresham would remain the starter and a valuable piece of the offense but there's no question Eifert could develop into a regular contributor as well. The two tight ends might ultimately play together for a majority of the time but some of Gresham's targets will head away from him to Eifert. Not that Gresham was a brilliant Fantasy option to begin with - he had only six games with 7 or more Fantasy points last season, a bit of a disappointment considering the anticipation many had for him. Obviously the big guy has found a way to improve over each of his last three years but 2013 could be a challenging year for him if Eifert develops quickly for the Bengals. Gresham is worth a late-round pick as a Fantasy starter, albeit one you might find yourself cutting if he doesn't produce big stats.

Bye 7

Ryan Griffin, Texans

The Texans selected Connecticut tight end Ryan Griffin in April's draft. Griffin has good height but needs a little more bulk to fit into the tight end frame the Texans tend to like. He's unlikely to produce a lot of stats and shouldn't be a part of Fantasy rosters.

Bye 8

Rob Gronkowski, Patriots

Rob Gronkowski's Fantasy outlook for this season is in question because of health concerns. He broke his forearm twice in 2012, which required four surgeries to correct any potential problems with his arm, but he was deemed OK. He was then set for back surgery in June, which leaves his availability for training camp -- and maybe the start of the season -- in doubt. When healthy, Gronkowski is the No. 1 tight end in all Fantasy leagues. Some quick math: With 38 touchdown receptions in 43 career games, Gronkowski is scoring at an 88 percent clip. With 187 career catches he's averaging a touchdown every 4.9 catches. And Gronkowski has five-plus catches in 21 games. We just have to wait and see where he's at once his back heals and he can return to the field. If Gronkowski is back at any point during training camp then draft him either No. 1 or 2 at his position (Jimmy Graham would be the other option) with a pick in Round 2 or 3. But if his back surgery forces him to miss the start of the year then his value will fall, and he would be an injury-risk with a pick in Round 4 or 5. Either way, as long as he's not expected to miss a significant amount of time, Gronkowski is worth drafting in the first 60 overall picks based on his potential. We just hope he can make a full recovery in time for Week 1.

Bye 10

James Hanna, Cowboys

James Hanna could be the No. 2 tight end for the Cowboys this season behind Jason Witten, but he will have minimal Fantasy value even in that role. Unless Witten gets hurt, we won't see Hanna do much to help owners. Hanna had just eight catches for 86 yards as a rookie in 2012. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 11

Clay Harbor, Eagles

Clay Harbor will serve as a reserve tight end for the Eagles this season behind Brent Celek, Zach Ertz and James Casey. In 2012, Harbor had 25 catches for 186 yards and two touchdowns. Unless Celek, Ertz and Casey get hurt, we won't see Harbor do much if he makes the final roster. Ignore Harbor in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 12

Cory Harkey, Rams

Cory Harkey will compete for a roster spot this year as a reserve tight end for the Rams. Even if he makes the final roster, he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 11

Ben Hartsock, Panthers

Ben Hartsock is known for his blocking but not his receiving. Because he's not expected to post much in the way of stats, Fantasy owners can pass on him.

Todd Heap, Free Agent

Todd Heap will look for a job this offseason after he was released by the Cardinals. Heap spent two years in Arizona and struggled with injuries. He had just 32 catches for 377 yards and one touchdown during that span, and bottomed out in 2012 with just eight catches for 94 yards in two games. Keep an eye on where he lands, but at 33, his best days are behind him. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Copper Helfet, Seahawks

Copper Helfet will compete for a roster spot with the Seahawks. Keep an eye on his progress in training camp, but he has minimal Fantasy value if he makes the final roster. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Brad Herman, Patriots

Brad Herman will compete for a roster spot with the Patriots in 2013, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve tight end. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Aaron Hernandez, Free Agent

Aaron Hernandez was released by the Patriots in late June following his alleged involvement in a homicide in Massachusetts. With legal issues looming it's very likely he will not play football in 2013. Fantasy owners should pass on Hernandez in seasonal leagues and consider him with a very late-round pick in deep dynasty/keeper leagues just in case he manages to work his way back into the NFL some day.

Mike Higgins, Saints

Mike Higgins will battle for a roster spot with the Saints this summer. He's not expected to land significant playing time and thus shouldn't be on anyone's Fantasy roster.

Michael Hoomanawanui, Free Agent

Michael Hoomanawanui is a restricted free agent this offseason, but he is expected to return to the Patriots. He was a reserve in 2012 but saw minimal action in the passing game with five catches for 109 yards. Even if he makes the final roster he should not be drafted in any leagues.

Rob Housler, Cardinals

Rob Housler saw a significant bump in production in his second season in 2012, but it wasn't enough to convince Fantasy owners he had more than just marginal value. Housler had 45 catches for 417 yards and no touchdowns. He has yet to score in two seasons, and we hope the Cardinals will use him more in 2013 (he had just 68 targets in 2012). We like Housler as a sleeper if the Cardinals can improve their quarterback spot or at least plan to feature Housler more in the passing game. He is not worth drafting in the majority of standard leagues, but Housler could end up as a bye-week or injury replacement if he starts out the season playing well. In dynasty leagues, plan on drafting Housler with a late-round pick.

D.C. Jefferson, Cardinals

The Cardinals drafted tight end D.C. Jefferson in the seventh round of the NFL Draft from Rutgers. He will compete for a roster spot as a reserve tight end. Even if he makes the final roster he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in the majority of leagues on Draft Day.

Nick Kasa, Raiders

The Raiders drafted tight end Nick Kasa out of Colorado in the sixth round of the NFL Draft. He was one of two tight ends the Raiders drafted along with Mychal Rivera from Tennessee in the same round. Oakland has a need for a tight end with Brandon Myers gone as a free agent to the Giants. Kasa will likely compete with Rivera and David Ausberry for the starting job, but Kasa is raw after starting his college career on defense. Ignore him in all standard leagues, and he's only worth a late-round pick in rookie-only formats.

Travis Kelce, Bengals

The Chiefs drafted tight end Travis Kelce out of Cincinnati with the first pick in the third round of the NFL Draft. Kelce should provide a nice target for quarterback Alex Smith after snagging 45 passes for 722 yards and eight touchdowns for the Bearcats last season. He will compete with Tony Moeaki and Anthony Fasano for playing time, but Kelce has minimal Fantasy value in seasonal leagues this year. He could develop into a playmaker down the road, which is why he's worth a mid-round pick in rookie-only formats, but don't draft him in most standard leagues. He could end up as a bye-week or injury replacement if he starts off the season playing well.

Dustin Keller, Dolphins

Dustin Keller signed with the Dolphins this offseason, and he will look to resurrect his career after a disappointing finish with the Jets. In 2012, Keller appeared in only eight games due to injuries. He finished with just 28 catches for 317 yards and two touchdowns. He has the ability to be a standout Fantasy option, but he needs the Dolphins to trust him. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues, but Keller could end up as a bye-week or injury replacement during the year. At best, consider Keller with a late-round pick in deeper formats.

Lance Kendricks, Rams

The Rams upgraded at tight end with the addition of Jared Cook, which will put Lance Kendricks into the No. 2 role on the depth chart. He had a decent year in 2012 with 42 catches for 519 yards and four touchdowns, but his role will be reduced this season. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Jeff King, Cardinals

Jeff King will return to the Cardinals as a reserve tight end, and he has minimal Fantasy value. In 2012, King had just 17 catches for 129 yards. He is more of a blocker than a receiver and has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in the majority of leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 9Bye 7*Bye 12*Bye 10*Bye 12*Bye 7*Bye 6*Bye 11*Bye 9*Bye 9

TIGHT END (CONT.)

Mike Leach, Cardinals

Mike Leach will compete for a roster spot with the Cardinals this season as a reserve tight end and is the team's long snapper. Even if he makes the final roster he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in the majority of leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 9

Mike McNeill, Rams

Mike McNeill will compete for a roster spot this year as a reserve tight end for the Rams. Even if he makes the final roster, he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 11

Marcedes Lewis, Jaguars

It might take a lot of guts to draft Marcedes Lewis in Fantasy play this summer, but if you listen to the Jaguars coaches they would tell you to do it. Upon arriving in Jacksonville, both head coach Gus Bradley and offensive coordinator Jedd Fisch talked glowingly about Lewis and how he was sort of misused by the previous coaching regime. Lewis went from 700 yards and 10 touchdowns in 2010 to an even 1,000 yards and four touchdowns in his next 31 games. Despite finishing with as many Fantasy points last season as Jermichael Finley, no one is thinking about drafting Lewis with anything but a late-round pick. If anything, Lewis could be a decent find off waivers during the year.

Bye 9

Heath Miller, Steelers

If not for a torn ACL suffered on Dec. 23, Heath Miller would be among the more popular tight ends on Draft Day. But after a career season that saw Miller catch 71 passes for 816 yards and score eight times, Miller's health will be at the forefront of Fantasy owners' minds. Taking him with a low-risk late-round pick is fine so long as it looks like he has a chance to play in Week 1 -- that won't be known until training camp is in full swing. There could be a chance Miller begins the season on the PUP list which would mean missing at least the first six games. If that happens then Miller wouldn't be worth drafting at all.

Bye 5

Jeron Mastrud, Dolphins

Jeron Mastrud will compete for a roster spot with the Dolphins in 2013, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve tight end. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 6

Kyle Miller, Dolphins

Kyle Miller will compete for a roster spot with the Dolphins in 2013, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve tight end. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 6

Anthony McCoy, Seahawks

Anthony McCoy is the No. 2 tight end for the Seahawks this year behind starter Zach Miller. McCoy finished second in receptions at tight end for Seattle last year with 18 catches for 291 yards and three touchdowns. Unless Miller gets hurt, McCoy will have minimal Fantasy value. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues this year.

Bye 12

Zach Miller, Seahawks

We're not expecting Zach Miller to develop into a quality Fantasy option in 2013. But he does have some promise in deeper leagues. In 2012, Miller had another down year in Seattle with 38 catches for 396 yards and three touchdowns. But the way he closed the season could be something to build on. His best game was the last of the season in the Divisional round playoff loss at Atlanta with eight catches for 142 yards and a touchdown. He had three touchdowns in his final six games, including the playoffs. We still don't trust Miller as a No. 1 Fantasy tight end, but he is someone to monitor. He might be used as an injury or bye-week replacement during the season if he picks up where last season left off.

Bye 12

Vance McDonald, 49ers

The 49ers drafted tight end Vance McDonald in the second round of the NFL Draft from Rice. McDonald is expected to be the No. 2 tight end in San Francisco behind Vernon Davis. The 49ers needed a second tight end with Delanie Walker now in Tennessee, and McDonald had a solid college career with 107 catches for 1,386 yards and 15 touchdowns over his final three years at Rice. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues, but Rice is someone to target with a mid-round pick in rookie-only formats.

Bye 9

Tony Moeaki, Chiefs

Tony Moeaki will compete for the starting job in training camp, and he faces some tough competition from Anthony Fasano and rookie Travis Kelce. You'll have to monitor what happens in training camp, but Moeaki could be an option in deeper leagues if he wins the job. New coach Andy Reid has done a nice job using tight ends going back to his tenure in Philadelphia, and Moeaki could turn into a playmaker. He had a nice year as a rookie in 2010 with 47 catches for 556 yards and three touchdowns, but he's struggled ever since. He's not worth drafting in the majority of leagues, but he could end up as a bye-week or injury replacement if he starts off the season playing well.

Bye 10

Sean McGrath, Seahawks

Sean McGrath will compete for a roster spot with the Seahawks. Keep an eye on his progress in training camp, but he has minimal Fantasy value if he makes the final roster. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Bye 12

Evan Moore, Eagles

Evan Moore will look for a new team after he was cut by the Eagles this offseason. He was once thought to have the potential to be a starting tight end in the NFL. Now he's just trying to prove he belongs. Keep an eye on where he ends up, but ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 12

Randy McMichael, Free Agent

Randy McMichael will look for a new team after the Chargers released him in March. Keep an eye on where he signs, but he has minimal Fantasy value. In 2012 he had just nine catches for 51 and no touchdowns.

Matthew Mulligan, Packers

Matthew Mulligan signed with the Packers this offseason after he was released by the Rams. He is expected to be the No. 2 tight end behind Jermichael Finley, but his primary role will be on special teams and blocking. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Brandon Myers, Giants

Brandon Myers picked the right season to have a breakout year. Myers was in a contract year in 2012, and he played well enough to earn a new contract from the Giants. He should be the starter in New York this year as the replacement option for Martellus Bennett. Myers is coming off a career performance in 2012. He had 79 catches for 806 yards and four touchdowns, which shattered his previous career highs. He had 105 targets, and Myers was a great waiver-wire addition for many Fantasy owners, especially in PPR leagues. That might be the case this year again since he's unlikely to get drafted, even with the move to the Giants with Eli Manning. We expect Myers to have some positive moments this year, but consistency will be a factor. He should only be drafted with a late-round pick in most formats.

Jake O'Connell, Chiefs

Jake O'Connell is a reserve tight end for the Chiefs. He will likely spend more time blocking and playing on special teams than catching passes. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day. In 2012 he had three catches for 18 yards and no touchdowns.

Greg Olsen, Panthers

Greg Olsen posted career-highs in receptions and yardage in 2012, but Fantasy owners still cast the Panthers' tight end as a mediocre Fantasy option. Perhaps that's because he had only five games with seven or more Fantasy points, making him far more inconsistent than most elite tight ends. He also had five games with three Fantasy points or less. Olsen's salary jumps in 2013 by more than $3 million but he's expected to stick with the Panthers as a short-area target for Cam Newton. The later you can draft Olsen, the better off you'll be. We wouldn't chance a pick on him until Round 9 at the earliest.

Michael Palmer, Free Agent

Michael Palmer is a restricted free agent this offseason. Palmer has just 21 catches for 123 yards (5.9 avg.) and three touchdowns (one per year) in his career. You're probably better off waiting for Palmer to break out than to draft him.

Bear Pascoe, Giants

Bear Pascoe is a reserve tight for the Giants and has minimal Fantasy value. He played sparingly in 2012 and will likely do the same this season. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Niles Paul, Redskins

Niles Paul will compete for a role with the Redskins this season, but his production is expected to be limited. Keep an eye on his stats early in the year, but he should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Bye 4

Logan Paulsen, Redskins

Logan Paulsen will be the No. 2 tight end for the Redskins behind Fred Davis. In 2012, with Davis out for the season after Week 7 with an Achilles injury, Paulsen had career highs with 27 catches for 323 yards and two touchdowns. It's doubtful he will top those stats this year if Davis is healthy, and Paulsen should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Brandon Pettigrew, Lions

Brandon Pettigrew looks like he should be a dominant Fantasy tight end. He's 6-foot-5, built like a house, and he plays a ton in the Lions offense. But his stats don't reflect that. Pettigrew finished 2012 with 567 receiving yards on 59 receptions, with three touchdowns - all statistical lows for him since 2009. There's obviously potential for him to rebound in 2013, something that could help him land a large contract after the season, so he'll be focused on lowering his drops. If you're the last one to draft a tight end this summer, going for Pettigrew as your starter to begin the year shouldn't sting.

John Phillips, Chargers

John Phillips will be the No. 2 tight end for the Chargers this season after being in that same role for the Cowboys last year. Phillips has 30 catches for 218 yards and two touchdowns in his four-year career, and he would only have increased Fantasy value if Antonio Gates got injured. Ignore Phillips in all leagues on Draft Day.

Dennis Pitta, Ravens

Dennis Pitta was set up to build off his success in 2012 before a hip injury at the start of training camp ended his season before it officially began. He will now miss the 2013 season after undergoing surgery for a dislocated hip. Fantasy owners in redraft leagues should avoid Pitta on Draft Day, but he's still worth holding onto in dynasty formats. He should be able to make a full recovery for 2014, and we expect him to return as a starting-caliber Fantasy option when healthy.

Leonard Pope, Free Agent

Leonard Pope is looking for work after spending last season in Pittsburgh. As a long-time underachieving tight end, Pope isn't worth a look in Fantasy.

Andrew Quarless, Packers

Andrew Quarless didn't play in 2012 after a knee injury in Week 13 in 2011 put a crimp into his plans. He'll try to land a roster spot and a role with the Packers this season. Until he's healthy and a regular part of the Packers' roster, Fantasy owners shouldn't touch him.

Jordan Reed, Redskins

The Redskins selected tight end Jordan Reed from Florida in the third round of the NFL Draft. Reed is 6-foot-2 and weighs 236 pounds. He was recruited as a quarterback by Florida, but he was moved to tight end in 2011. Last year he led the Gators in receiving with 45 catches for 559 yards. The choice was somewhat of a surprise because the Redskins are well-stocked at tight end with Fred Davis, Logan Paulsen and Niles Paul. Reed has minimal Fantasy value this season in standard leagues, but he could be a solid Fantasy option in 2014 when Davis is potentially gone after signing a one-year deal. Reed could be a tight end in the mold of Aaron Hernandez, who is not traditional and plays almost like a receiver. He's a great tight end to target with a mid-round pick in dynasty only leagues.

Allen Reisner, Jaguars

Allen Reisner should reprise his role as a backup tight end with the Jaguars in 2013. In that role, he won't put up much in the way of stats and therefore won't be an asset for Fantasy owners to consider. Keep him off of rosters.

Konrad Reuland, Jets

Konrad Reuland is hoping to make the final roster for the Jets as a reserve tight end. Even if he makes the team he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Mychal Rivera, Raiders

The Raiders drafted tight end Mychal Rivera out of Tennessee in the sixth round of the NFL Draft. He was one of two tight ends the Raiders drafted along with Nick Kasa from Colorado in the same round. Oakland has a need for a tight end with Brandon Myers gone as a free agent to the Giants. Rivera will likely compete with Kasa and David Ausberry for the starting job, but Rivera has to prove he can handle the job. Ignore him in all standard leagues, and he's only worth a late-round pick in rookie-only formats.

Adrien Robinson, Giants

Adrien Robinson is a reserve tight for the Giants and has minimal Fantasy value. He played sparingly in 2012 and will likely do the same this season. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Dante Rosario, Cowboys

Dante Rosario signed with the Cowboys in June, and he will look to make the final roster as a backup tight end. Rosario spent 2012 in San Diego, and he had 10 catches for 95 yards and three touchdowns. He scored all three touchdowns in Week 2 against the Titans, when Antonio Gates was out, but otherwise Rosario did nothing. He should not be drafted in the majority of leagues even if he's Jason Witten's primary backup.

Martin Rucker, Free Agent

Martin Rucker is a restricted free agent this offseason. Even if he returns to the Chiefs this year he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Bye 5

Kyle Rudolph, Vikings

Kyle Rudolph will be among the first 10 tight ends drafted this summer, though he'll be taken long after the likes of Gronk and Jimmy Graham. In 16 games last season, Rudolph didn't catch for more than 67 yards per contest but he had eight games with at least seven Fantasy points, a positive for tight ends not named Gronk or Graham. Any sort of improved role given to him this summer will only help him out more. Rudolph is among the crop of tight ends worth a mid- to late-round pick in drafts for those owners who choose not to spend an early-round pick on a tight end named ... well, you know.

Weslye Saunders, Colts

Tight end Weslye Saunders will battle for a roster spot with the Colts this summer. Even if he makes the final roster, he's not expected to produce enough stats for Fantasy use. Keep him off of rosters.

Mickey Shuler, Raiders

Mickey Shuler will compete for a role in Oakland this season, but he has minimal Fantasy value as a reserve tight end. Even if he makes the final roster, he would not be worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Alex Smith, Free Agent

With one touchdown and 31 catches over his last four seasons, it's tough to envision Alex Smith being helpful to Fantasy owners. He's not on an NFL roster. We wouldn't touch him.

Andre Smith, Cowboys

Andre Smith will compete for a roster spot with the Cowboys this year but has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day even if he makes the final roster.

Hayden Smith, Jets

Hayden Smith is hoping to make the final roster for the Jets as a reserve tight end. Even if he makes the team he would have minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in all leagues on Draft Day.

Lee Smith, Bills

Lee Smith has a chance to compete for increased playing time this season for the Bills. Scott Chandler is coming off a torn ACL in Week 16 of 2012, and he might not be ready to start the season. If he's out, the Bills could turn to Smith as their starting tight end. He only has eight catches for 24 yards and two touchdowns in two seasons, but the increased playing time could help his production. But even if he does start, he would not be worth drafting in the majority of leagues.

Matt Spaeth, Steelers

Matt Spaeth returned to Pittsburgh this offseason where he is expected to continue as a blocking tight end with minimal receiving opportunities. Though he did score on one of his six catches last season, he's not productive enough on a regular basis to consider drafting. Leave him off of rosters.

Kory Sperry, Cardinals

Kory Sperry will compete for a roster spot with the Cardinals this season as a reserve tight end. Even if he makes the final roster he has minimal Fantasy value. Ignore him in the majority of leagues on Draft Day.

Craig Stevens, Titans

Craig Stevens is a blocking tight end for the Titans who shouldn't be considered in Fantasy. Need proof? He played in 15 games and caught 23 passes last season for 275 yards and a touchdown. Keep him off of Fantasy rosters.

Luke Stocker, Buccaneers

Luke Stocker will battle with Tom Crabtree for playing time at tight end this summer. He played as the second tight end behind Dallas Clark last year, catching 16 passes for 165 yards and a touchdown, all career-highs. No one should draft Stocker until we see how he's being used in training camp but he does carry a little sleeper potential.

Zach Sudfeld, Patriots

Here's the skinny on Sudfeld: He's a 6-foot-7, 250-pound matchup nightmare who was a solid all-around athlete at Nevada but missed nearly two full seasons because of injuries. In fact, according to NFLDraftScout.com/CBSSports.com's Dane Brugler, Sudfeld had six surgeries in his first five years at school (he was there six years) including work on his shoulder, leg, knee and wrist. There's ridiculous potential for 'Suds' in the beginning of the season with Rob Gronkowski sidelined, enough to consider him with a late-round flier or a pickup off waivers before Week 1.

Jacob Tamme, Broncos

Jacob Tamme didn't have the breakout season many hoped for in 2012 when he followed Peyton Manning from Indianapolis to Denver. But Tamme still played well, and maybe this is the year his breakout performance will happen. Tamme had 52 catches for 555 yards and two touchdowns in 2012. He split playing time with Joel Dreessen, which hindered his production, and Tamme had just two games with double digits in Fantasy points. If you're looking at Tamme and Dreessen, consider Tamme the better option just based on targets since Tamme had 85 compared to Dreessen's 58. But if you're comparing Tamme to other Fantasy tight ends, you might consider him a second-tier option, especially with the addition of Wes Welker. He's not worth drafting in most formats and should be considered just an injury or bye-week replacement.

Ryan Taylor, Packers

Ryan Taylor has some long-term potential for the Packers but shouldn't be a part of Fantasy plans. Why? Because he's buried on the depth chart behind starter Jermichael Finley. Until that changes, keep him off rosters.

Bye 9David Thomas, Saints

David Thomas was expected to serve the Saints as a backup tight end this season until they cut him in mid-February. Without a team, Thomas shouldn't be touched in Fantasy play.

Bye 7Julius Thomas, Broncos

Julius Thomas remains a project for the Broncos. When he was drafted he was expected to be Denver's version of Antonio Gates or Jimmy Graham as a football player converted to tight end, and he could still develop into a star down the road. But he has just one catch in two seasons for five yards, and it's hard to see him do anything this year with Jacob Tamme and Joel Dreessen ahead of him on the depth chart. Thomas is not worth drafting in most seasonal leagues, but he could be worth a late-round flier in deep dynasty formats. One day we could be talking about Thomas as a solid Fantasy tight end, but that's not expected to happen this year.

Bye 9Taylor Thompson, Titans

Taylor Thompson probably doesn't have much of a chance to break out after catching six passes last season and playing behind Delanie Walker and a number of receivers this season. Though we've always liked the potential of Thompson, he's probably just not going to play enough to be an asset in Fantasy.

Bye 8Levine Toilolo, Falcons

The Falcons selected Stanford tight end Levine Toilolo in the fourth round of the NFL draft. The 6-foot-8, 260-pound Toilolo will have a chance to be mentored by veteran tight end Tony Gonzalez, who put off his retirement plans to return for the 2013 season. Toilolo had 24 catches for 393 yards and four touchdowns in 2012 and had 10 career touchdown catches for the Cardinal. He was the backup to Zach Ertz at Stanford for good reason: His blocking is so-so and has had his fair share of drops. No doubt, he's a project pick for the Falcons, but they won't need him anytime soon with Gonzalez around. Minimal stats are expected -- he's only worth a late pick in dynasty/keeper league drafts and a mid-to-late pick in rookie-only drafts.

Bye 6Delanie Walker, Titans

Delanie Walker signed with the Titans this offseason where he will be the No. 1 tight end. Walker spent the first seven years of his career with the 49ers, and he had the most success in 2012 with 21 catches for 344 yards and three touchdowns. Granted, he's never been a starter, but Walker is not a No. 1 Fantasy tight end even with the new opportunity. He could end up as a bye-week or injury replacement, but he should not be drafted in most formats even though he's now the starter in Tennessee.

Bye 8Bye 4

Benjamin Watson, Saints

Veteran Benjamin Watson signed with the Saints to serve as their backup tight end behind Jimmy Graham. The concern with Watson, an able player, is he's 32 with a history of concussions. He played all 16 games in 2012, but missed three games in 2011 with head injuries. He's unlikely to be in a meaningful role with the Saints, so Fantasy owners shouldn't spend any attention on him.

D.J. Williams, Packers

D.J. Williams made seven catches for 57 yards in his second season and will battle to improve on that total in 2013. But so long as he plays behind starter Jermichael Finley, playing time will be limited for him. If that changes then Williams could serve as a big-time sleeper. Until then, it might be a while before the 6-foot-2 tight end makes an impact.

Michael Williams, Lions

The Lions selected Alabama tight end Michael Williams in April's draft. Williams is a behemoth (6-foot-6, 278 pounds) who is better at blocking than receiving. We saw him up close at the Senior Bowl in January and came away disappointed. He's only worth a late-round look in rookie-only drafts.

Luke Wilson, Seahawks

The Seahawks drafted tight end Luke Wilson in the fifth round of the NFL Draft from Rice. Wilson has plenty of upside at 6 feet 5, 252 pounds and ran the 40-yard dash in 4.51 seconds. Wilson had a nagging ankle injury during his senior year and also played the same position as Vance McDonald, who the 49ers drafted in the second round. The Seahawks have Zach Miller, the highest-paid tight end in the league this season, and Anthony McCoy, who Seattle drafted in the sixth round in 2010. Wilson might be a playmaker for the Seahawks down the road, but he has minimal Fantasy value now in seasonal leagues. Pass on him in standard formats this year, but he's worth a late-round pick in rookie-only leagues.

Kellen Winslow, Jets

Kellen Winslow landed a spot on the Jets roster after a strong tryout in June. Once a standout Fantasy tight end, Winslow appeared in one game with New England in Week 3. He had one catch for 12 yards on two targets before being granted his release because he wasn't healthy. Now he says he's fine but his knees have been worked on for years and any minor tweak could send him to the bench. Winslow isn't worth drafting even if he appears to be a decent option after training camp with Gang Green.

Bye 7

Jason Witten, Cowboys

The Cowboys might have drafted Jason Witten's successor this season with rookie Gavin Escobar, but don't expect Witten to slow down. He should post quality stats again this season. Witten had a career-high 110 catches in 2012, and he also added 1,039 yards and three touchdowns. This is the fourth time since 2007 he's had at least 94 catches and 1,000 receiving yards. The problem for Witten is his lack of touchdowns since he's scored more than five times just once since 2008. But that hasn't kept Witten from being an elite Fantasy option since he's been a Top 5 tight end four times since 2007 (he was No. 5 last year with 115 points in a standard league). Witten also has Tony Romo's eye since he led the team and all tight ends with 147 targets, and we expect Romo to continue looking in Witten's direction a lot. He's worth drafting as early as Round 4 in the majority of leagues with his value slightly higher in PPR formats.

Bye 9

Bye 12

Bye 10

KICKERS

David Akers, Lions

David Akers landed on his feet after the 49ers cut him in February. He signed with the Lions in April, and that might be a slight upgrade. He joins a high-powered offense and gets to kick indoors at home. This could be the boost Akers needs after his amazing fall from grace. In 2011, Akers was the No. 1 kicker in all Fantasy leagues. Akers had 186 Fantasy points in a standard league and made 44 of 52 field goals with seven kicks of at least 50 yards and 34 extra points. But in 2012, he fell apart with 131 points. He missed eight field goals and his conversion rate of 69 percent was the lowest in his career. He should rebound with the Lions, and Akers is still worth a last-round pick in the majority of leagues. He will once again be a No. 1 Fantasy option this season.

Dan Bailey, Cowboys

Dan Bailey has been the Cowboys kicker for the past two seasons, and he's been a top-12 Fantasy kicker both times. He was No. 7 in Fantasy points in 2011 with 139, and even though his production dropped last year to 130 points, he finished at No. 12. Last year, Bailey made 29 of 31 field goals and all 37 extra points. He had three 50-yard field goals, and he should remain productive again. Bailey has all the qualities you look for in a Fantasy kicker: good offense, indoor stadium and accuracy. Plan on drafting him with a last-round pick.

Connor Barth, Buccaneers

Buccaneers kicker Connor Barth will miss the 2013 season after suffering a torn Achilles just before the start of training camp. He is expected to make a full recovery in time for the 2014 season, but he should not be drafted this year.

Rob Bironas, Titans

Rob Bironas might no longer be considered a quality Fantasy kicker worthy of a pick on Draft Day. Last season he hit 25 of 31 field goals for a six-season low of 80.6 pct. made. He also made just one of two attempts from 50-plus yards and a disappointing 5 of 10 kicks from 40 to 49 yards. Bironas is risky if he's going to hit just over 80 percent of his field goals but it's worth noting the Titans have attempted 30-plus field goals in five of the last six seasons, a pretty good mark and a good indication of what to expect from Bironas in terms of opportunity. You're probably better off looking for him off waivers.

Matt Bryant, Falcons

Matt Bryant had another solid year in 2012, making just over 85 percent of his field goals for the third year in a row. Bryant nailed 33 of 38 field goals (including all four from 50-plus yards) and hit 44 extra points. With the offense expected to remain prolific, there's no reason to doubt Bryant as one of the top kicking options in Fantasy. Consider Bryant a reliable leg worth picking in the last round of your Fantasy draft.

Bye 9

Randy Bullock, Texans

Randy Bullock is slated to be the Texans' kicker after a torn groin wiped out his rookie year. The 5-foot-9, 205-pound Bullock was the first kicker drafted by Houston -- ever. He won the Lou Groza award in college, honoring the nation's top kicker, after connecting on 29 of 32 field-goal attempts in 2011. The Texans should give Bullock plenty of chances to hit field goals, making him a decent final-round pick that other owners might not be educated on.

Bye 8

Dan Carpenter, Dolphins

Dan Carpenter is looking for a new job after he was cut by the Dolphins in the middle of training camp. He was replaced by rookie Caleb Sturgis, and now Carpenter will hope to land with a new team. In 2012, Carpenter made 22 of 27 field goals and 26 extra points. He missed the final two games with a groin injury. Carpenter did make at least 29 field goals in consecutive years from 2010-11, but he's also missed at least five field goals in each of the past three seasons. Keep an eye on where he lands, but Carpenter would only be a No. 2 Fantasy kicker at best.

Bye 6

Mason Crosby, Packers

Mason Crosby might be on the hot seat after a rather disappointing 2012 where he hit 21 of 33 field goals (a yucky 63.6 pct.) including 2 of 9 from 50-plus yards. So while he's continued to attempt at least 28 field goals per season, he's taken a step back. And the truth is he's topped 80 percent of his field goals just once. If you draft Crosby on the merit of him being the Packers kicker that's one thing, but don't commit to him if you can find a more reliable option off waivers. No one should take him before the final round, if at all.

Bye 4

Phil Dawson, 49ers

Phil Dawson signed with the 49ers in March, giving him a chance to play for a contender after spending his entire career with the Browns. This is a move we like a lot -- Dawson has made at least 82.1 percent of his field goals annually since 2007 and had a very good year with 29 of 31 field goals made in 2012 including a perfect 7 of 7 from 50-plus yards. Over his last two seasons he's made 14 of 15 from 50-plus yards, which is pretty darn good. For the first time in a while, Dawson deserves a draft pick by Fantasy owners. We recommend owners taking him with one of their final two selections.

Bye 9

Jay Feely, Cardinals

Jay Feely is a good kicker, but Fantasy owners need the Cardinals offense to be more successful to count on him. Feely made 25 of 28 field goals in 2012, including two from at least 50 yards and a long of 61. He also added 25 extra points, but he finished as just the No. 23 Fantasy kicker in standard leagues. If the Cardinals can move the ball with more success in 2013 and give Feely more scoring chances then he will be a kicker to use in the majority of leagues. But he has to prove himself first. He should not be drafted in most formats, and instead should just be added off the waiver wire if he starts out the season playing well.

KICKERS (CONT.)

Nick Folk, Jets

Nick Folk is back with the Jets this year after signing a one-year contract. He finished 2012 with the Jets, but he converted just 21 of 27 field goals and 30 extra points. In six years, Folk has just one season with 30 field goals, which was 2010. He is more of a No. 2 Fantasy kicker, and he should not be drafted in the majority of leagues.

Bye 10

Kai Forbath, Redskins

Kai Forbath has the look of a quality Fantasy kicker based on his production in 2012. After joining the team in early October, Forbath became a valuable member of Washington's offense and connected on his first 17 field-goal attempts during the regular season. He missed his only kick in Week 17, and he also added 33 extra points. Fantasy owners should consider him a low-end option at the end of drafts for the 2013 season as the Redskins' offense should continue to improve next year.

Bye 5

Graham Gano, Panthers

Graham Gano ended 2012 as the Panthers kicker, a job he'll have a chance to keep in 2013. Gano made 9 of 11 field goals with Carolina along with 20 of 21 extra points. But with a 74.7 career field goal percentage including 5 of 11 made from 50-plus yards, chances are he'll be on a short leash with the Panthers. Carolina's attempted 49 field goals over the last two seasons; whoever kicks for them shouldn't be a Fantasy consideration.

Bye 4

Stephen Gostkowski, Patriots

Stephen Gostkowski was the No. 1 Fantasy kicker in 2012, and we expect him to repeat in 2013 since he plays for a high-powered offense with plenty of chances to succeed. Gostkowski made 29 of 35 field goals in 2012 with 66 extra points. Only four kickers had more than 50 extra points (Gostkowski, Garrett Hartley, Matt Prater and Mason Crosby), but Gostkowski was the only one above 60. He had double digits in Fantasy points in 10 games, and this is now the third time in his career he had had more than 55 extra points. He should post quality stats again in 2013, and he is worth drafting with a late-round pick in all leagues.

Bye 10

Robbie Gould, Bears

Bears kicker Robbie Gould was a so-so Fantasy kicker in 2012 thanks to an injury that cost him three games and a lack of opportunities. In total Gould hit 21 of 25 field goals including a perfect 2 of 2 from 50-plus yards. Typically Gould attempts around 30 field goals a year and has fluctuated between 83.3 percent and 89.7 percent accuracy on field goals over his last seven seasons, which is why he's appealing for Fantasy. With Marc Trestman's alleged high-powered offense taking residence in Chicago, the field goal attempts should continue for Gould. Consider him among your options with a final-round pick on Draft Day.

Bye 8

Shayne Graham, Browns

Shayne Graham is set to replace Phil Dawson as the Browns' place-kicker this season. It's a job that could lead to some productive weeks as the Browns have re-tooled their offense and should be more aggressive than in the past. Last year with Houston, Graham hit 31 of 38 field goals and was 4 of 9 from 50-plus yards. He's hit at least 80 percent of his field goals every year since 2003, so assuming he gets around 30 field goal tries with the Browns he could be decent. You might not even have to draft Graham but rather find him off waivers when the season starts.

Bye 10

Garrett Hartley, Saints

Garrett Hartley didn't have many field goal opportunities in 2012, kicking 18 of 22 including 3 of 4 from 50-plus yards. He made 57 extra points, giving him a grand total of 117 Fantasy points. If this was the first time Hartley had attempted under 30 field goals we'd probably be more willing to recommend him as a good Fantasy kicker. But the guy has never attempted more than 25 kicks in a season in his career! And here's another nugget: Since Sean Payton has become head coach, the team has attempted more than 30 field goals in a year once! Hartley might be on a team with an explosive offense but there's not going to be as many opportunities there as there are for other kickers. Expect him to get picked in the final round on Draft Day, but you don't have to be the one to take him

Bye 7

Steven Hauschka, Seahawks

Steven Hauschka re-signed with the Seahawks this offseason as expected even though he was a free agent. Hauschka made 24 of 27 field goals in 2012 with a long of 52 yards. It was his lone field goal of 50-plus yards, and all three of his misses were from 50-plus yards. He also made 46 of 48 extra points. In two years with the Seahawks, Hauschka has made 49 of 57 field goals. He remains just a No. 2 Fantasy kicker even with his return to the Seahawks and is not worth drafting in most leagues.

Bye 12

Alex Henery, Eagles

Alex Henery has the chance to be an elite Fantasy kicker. He just needs more help from his offense. Henery has made 51 field goals in two years, and he was a solid Fantasy option as a rookie in 2011 when he had 46 extra points. But his extra points dropped to 25 last season, which hurt his value. Henery had just three games with double digits in Fantasy points, and he finished No. 21 among kickers with 106 points for the year. If you give him back the 21 extra points he had from 2011 he would have been No. 13 in Fantasy points for the year, so you can see the potential is there. Henery will likely go undrafted in the majority of leagues, but he's a great bye-week replacement. And if he starts off the season kicking at a high level then don't hesitate to add him off the waiver wire.

KICKERS (CONT.)

Dustin Hopkins, Bills

The Bills drafted kicker Dustin Hopkins in the sixth round of the NFL Draft out of Florida State. Hopkins will compete with veteran Rian Lindell for the starting job, but even if Hopkins wins he would be just a No. 2 Fantasy kicker at best. Keep an eye on what develops with Hopkins and Lindell in training camp, but don't plan on drafting Hopkins in the majority of leagues.

Sebastian Janikowski, Raiders

Sebastian Janikowski continues to prove he's among the best Fantasy kickers, and he should be drafted as a starter with a late-round pick in all leagues. In 2012, Janikowski was 31 for 34 in field-goal attempts and had a long of 57 yards. He actually was 6 for 9 from 50-plus yards this year and posted a double-digit Fantasy total in five of his 16 games on the year. This is the third year in a row Janikowski has made at least 31 field goals, and he should continue to be an excellent weapon for the Raiders and Fantasy owners.

Rian Lindell, Bills

Rian Lindell will face some competition this season after the Bills drafted rookie Dustin Hopkins in the sixth round of the NFL Draft. If Lindell keeps his job he would remain just a No. 2 Fantasy kicker. Lindell made just 21 field goals in 2012 with a long of 50. He also connected on all 39 point after attempts. Keep an eye on what develop in training camp with Lindell and Hopkins, but even if Lindell wins the job he will go undrafted in the majority of leagues.

Nick Novak, Chargers

Nick Novak will stay with the Chargers this year after he signed a four-year contract this offseason for $6.6 million. He spent 2012 with the Chargers from Week 3 on after he replaced the injured Nate Kaeding, and he finished the season 18 of 20 on field goals and made all 33 extra points. Novak made two kicks from 50-plus yards. He has been with the Chargers the past two seasons, so you know what you're getting. He is worth a last-round pick in the majority of leagues or should be considered a strong bye-week replacement.

Mike Nugent, Bengals

Mike Nugent returns as the Bengals' kicker in 2013, and why not after hitting over 80 percent of his field goals for the second year in a row? Nugent hit 19 of 23 field goals over 12 games, hitting 7 of 11 kicks from 40-plus yards (he was 1 of 2 from 50-plus yards). The Bengals' offense should continue to improve, giving Nugent some opportunities to kick more field goals. We'd spend a final-round flier on Nugent, who has missed 13 total field goals on 80 tries since arriving in Cincy. That's solid no matter how you slice it.

Bye 12Matt Prater, Broncos

Matt Prater proved to be one of the best Fantasy kickers in 2012, and he will try to build on that performance this season. Prater finished No. 7 in Fantasy points last year with 26 of 32 field goals made and all 55 extra points. He was third in the NFL in extra points behind Stephen Gostkowski (66) and Garrett Hartley (57), and he made three kicks from 50-plus yards. We consider Prater a No. 1 Fantasy option, and he's worth drafting with a last-round pick in all leagues.

Bye 9Josh Scobee, Jaguars

While Josh Scobee made 25 of 28 field goals last season (89.3 pct.) he still disappointed from a Fantasy perspective. He missed one of two kicks from 50-plus yards and only attempted 19 extra points (he missed one). That limited work made him an unappealing Fantasy option. While the Jaguars' offense figures to be a little better in 2013, we still wouldn't draft Scobee. There are simply too many other great Fantasy kickers out there to survey with a final-round pick.

Bye 9Caleb Sturgis, Dolphins

The Dolphins drafted Caleb Sturgis in the fifth round of the NFL Draft out of the University of Florida. Sturgis will compete with Dan Carpenter for the kicking job in Miami, and Sturgis might be the favorite based on Carpenter's struggles in recent years. Keep an eye on what develops of this battle in training camp, and if Sturgis is kicking for the Dolphins he would be considered a No. 2 Fantasy option in all leagues.

Bye 6Ryan Succop, Chiefs

Ryan Succop is coming off a career year in 2012, and he will look to build off that performance this season. He made a career-high 28 field goals last year in a career-high 34 attempts. The problem was he made a career-low 17 extra points. Succop has the potential to be a solid Fantasy kicker, but the Chiefs need to improve offensively. He should only be used as a bye-week replacement in most formats, but he could emerge as a legit option if coach Andy Reid improves the offense.

Bye 10Shaun Suisham, Steelers

Shaun Suisham is the hired leg of the Steelers, rebounding after a dismal 2011 to make 28 of 31 field goals in 2012 but just 1 of 3 from 50-plus yards. That's consistent with his history as he's struggled to hit long field goals. The Steelers' offense losing key pieces makes Suisham all the less desirable. Consider another kicker on Draft Day and maybe think about Suisham as a one-week replacement off waivers once the season starts.

KICKERS (CONT.)

Caleb Sturgis, Dolphins

The Dolphins drafted Caleb Sturgis in the fifth round of the NFL Draft out of the University of Florida, and he will be the team's kicker this season after beating out Dan Carpenter in training camp. Sturgis has the chance to put up plenty of points with the Dolphins and their up-and-coming offense, but he remains a No. 2 Fantasy option coming into the season. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues and should only be considered a bye-week replacement to open the year.

Justin Tucker, Ravens

The Ravens made a smart move by adding rookie Justin Tucker last season as he stands now as one of the top kickers in football. In 2012 he made 30 of 33 field goals, including 4 of 4 from 50-plus yards. With Baltimore's offense becoming more aggressive, there could be a similar amount of opportunities for Tucker to attempt field goals in 2013. We'd take him with a pick in the second-to-last round of your draft.

Lawrence Tynes, Buccaneers

Buccaneers kicker Lawrence Tynes signed in Tampa Bay when Connor Barth (Achilles) was lost for the year. The Bucs lucked out that Tynes was available coming off the best year of his career with 33 field goals in 2012 for the Giants. We consider Tynes a No. 2 Fantasy kicker, but he's a great bye-week replacement. And if your starting kicker gets off to a slow start then don't hesitate to grab Tynes, who has been solid during his tenure with the Giants.

Adam Vinatieri, Colts

Adam Vinatieri remains the Colts' kicker after another fairly rough season. After grinding through a tough 2011, he made 26 of 33 field goals in 2012 including 4 of 7 from 50-plus yards. Though Indy's offense should be potent again in 2013, we wouldn't draft Vinatieri but would recommend him as a one-week replacement.

Blair Walsh, Vikings

Andrew Luck, Robert Griffin III and Russell Wilson might have been impact rookies in 2012, but so was kicker Blair Walsh. He accounted for 141 points with Minnesota, hitting 35 of 38 field goals including a perfect 10 of 10 from 50-plus yards. He also hit all 36 of his extra points. That's good enough to make him the best kicker you could ask for in Fantasy in 2013. It is worth noting that this was the first time in four seasons the Vikings were among the top 10 in field-goal attempts but with the offense figuring to only add talent and the team having a ton of faith in Walsh, it makes sense to come out of the gate trusting him on your Fantasy team. Use one of your last two picks on him.

Bye 6

Greg Zuerlein, Rams

Greg Zuerlein is hoping for another hot start this season, but he hopes to have a complete year and not just a good beginning like he did in 2012. Last year, which was Zuerlein's rookie campaign, he earned the nicknames "Greg the Leg" and "Legatron" for his performance through the first four weeks of the season. He made his first 12 field goals, including three from 50-plus yards and one from 60 yards. He had three games with double digits in Fantasy points over that span, but he cooled off from there with only two games with double digits in Fantasy points from Week 5 on. We like Zuerlein as a potential starting option in all leagues, but he's only worth a last-round pick at best. If he goes undrafted then consider him a great bye-week replacement during the year.

DST

San Francisco 49ers

The 49ers DST benefits from several things, mainly some talented players (Patrick Willis, Aldon Smith, NaVorro Bowman, Justin Smith and Carlos Rogers), and they were a top-10 DST in standard leagues in 2012 for the second year in a row. The 49ers had three defensive touchdowns, 14 interceptions, 38 sacks and 11 fumble recoveries, and they should remain an elite Fantasy option this year. Plan on drafting the 49ers DST as a No. 1 unit, and they should be selected with a late-round pick in all formats on Draft Day, as early as Round 12.

Chicago Bears

The Bears continue to field one of the toughest defenses around, so much so that the unit has overshadowed the special-teams game that used to produce big numbers. Last year the defense was responsible for an NFL-record nine touchdowns with a special-teams score added on. The unit also picked up 41 sacks and 21 interceptions. The run defense ranked eighth (101.7 rush yards per game and six rush touchdowns allowed all season) and the pass defense pitched in, ranking eighth (213.9 yards per game). Now, can they do it again? The team made some changes at linebacker, passing on re-signing Brian Urlacher and Nick Roach and replacing them with veterans D.J. Williams and James Anderson as well as rookies Jon Bostic and Khaseem Greene. That's considered an upgrade. There are some questions about the shape of the secondary, particularly in terms of their age. On the plus side, the pass rush should remain aggressive and even though there's a new coaching staff in place, the core fundamentals of the defense aren't expected to change. Any bonus you can get from Devin Hester returning to full-time kick-return duties will help too. The Bears DST is worth one of your last four picks.

Cincinnati Bengals

One of the best kept secrets in the NFL is the incredible play of the Bengals' defense. Last year the team had the delightful combination of good health and talent to tally 52 sacks, 15 interceptions, 16 forced fumbles and five touchdowns while holding opponents to a modest average of 21.2 points per game. It's the first time in a while the Cincinnati DST has played well in consecutive years. With the amount of talent they have, there's no reason to believe it won't continue, especially as the Steelers, Ravens and Browns go through varying growing pains offensively. Expect the Bengals DST to be picked in the second-to-last round of drafts this summer.

Buffalo Bills

The Bills DST had a lot of hype in 2012 after signing Mario Williams, but the addition didn't change much. The Bills DST was a middle-of-the-pack option with 30 sacks (one more than 2011), and they allowed 395 points, which was tied with Denver for third worst in the NFL. The Bills DST did have 29 takeaways (20 interceptions) and scored four touchdowns, but the unit has plenty of work to do under new coordinator Mike Pettine, who held the same position with the Jets last year. The Jets were known for creative blitz packages, which should help the pass rush, but this unit has a lot to prove before Fantasy owners can trust them.

Bye 9

Denver Broncos

The Broncos DST was among the best in all leagues in 2012, and the unit should continue to dominate this year. The Broncos have a standout pass rusher in Von Miller and a ballhawking secondary that accounted for 16 interceptions. The Broncos DST also scored eight touchdowns, with two coming on special teams from Trindon Holliday, and they were among the league leaders at just 18 points per game on average. The best thing about the Broncos DST is their schedule since they get six games against rebuilding offenses in Kansas City, San Diego and Oakland. We consider the Broncos DST a No. 1 option, and they are worth drafting as the top unit in all leagues with a pick beginning in Round 11 or 12.

Cleveland Browns

It's been a long time since the Browns DST was great for Fantasy Football but the new coaching staff is hoping to change things. The Browns hired Ray Horton to coordinate the defense after he and the Cardinals parted ways. The Browns will move to a 3-4 front and spent a lot of money in free agency to make the unit look good. Paul Kruger and first-round pick Barkevious Mingo will join Jabaal Sheard and Quentin Groves as pass rushers and the defensive line was fortified with the addition of end Desmond Bryant. The Browns will have big men up front, D'Qwell Jackson in the middle and a young secondary headlined by Joe Haden and T.J. Ward. With Horton calling the shots the team should improve on the 38 sacks and 17 interceptions they had last year while finishing 19th against the run and 25th against the pass. Save for some big moves we'd look for the Browns DST off waivers as a one-week replacement.

Tampa Bay Buccaneers

Tampa Bay's run defense was excellent in 2012, but its pass defense left a lot to be desired. The Bucs allowed just 1,320 rush yards and 13 touchdowns on the ground over 16 games but yielded over 4,700 passing yards and 30 scores through the air. Hence why the team acquired cornerback Darrelle Revis from the Jets and drafted Mississippi State cornerback Johnthan Banks while bringing back corner Eric Wright, in addition to signing Dashon Goldson to play safety. The secondary, at least on paper, is one of the best in the league (don't forget safety Mark Barron) but questions persist about how much work they'll deal with given the lack of an established pass rush. The Bucs will welcome back pass rusher Adrian Clayborn, who missed most of the 2012 campaign with a knee injury and have Da'Quan Bowers in the fold there too. If both players play to their potential then this defense, complete with a quality defensive line including Gerald McCoy and a great pair of linebackers in Lavonte David and Mason Foster, then this defense could be among the best in the league. A great Week 1 matchup at the Jets also gives some appeal but matchups against the Saints and Patriots in Weeks 2 and 3 will make them difficult to start. They also play several other tough offenses along the way. If you're the kind of Fantasy owner to draft multiple DSTs then the Bucs should make your list. If you prefer to take one DST, which is typical, the Bucs will be the team you draft for Week 1 and either bench or cut because of tough matchups thereafter.

San Diego Chargers

The Chargers DST played well in 2012, and they will look to build off that performance this season. The Chargers were a top-10 Fantasy DST last year with 38 sacks, 14 fumble recoveries, nine defensive touchdowns and 14 interceptions. While the overall stats were good, part of the reason for the success was an easy schedule. The Chargers had 10 games with double digits in Fantasy points in a standard league but three games with five points or less. They also had three huge games against the Chiefs (twice) and Jets with at least 24 Fantasy points in each contest. We expect the Chargers DST to continue to play well this season, and they are worth drafting with a late-round pick as your starting option.

Kansas City Chiefs

The Chiefs DST has potential to be a solid unit in 2013. They just have to play up to their level of talent. The Chiefs have Pro Bowl players in Tamba Hali, Derrick Johnson and Eric Berry, and Justin Houston had double digits in sacks in 2012. But even with that the Chiefs still finished second-to-last in Fantasy points. They were near the bottom or last in sacks (27), interceptions (seven), fumble recoveries (six) and points allowed (425). New defensive coordinator Bob Sutton has his work cut out for him, and we hope the Chiefs DST can improve. They won't get drafted in the majority of leagues, but they should be considered a bye-week replacement in most formats.

Indianapolis Colts

The Colts defense didn't do a whole heck of a lot to take steps forward in 2012, ranking 29th vs. the run and 21st against the pass. Robert Mathis led the way with eight of the team's 32 sacks while Darius Butler and Vontae Davis totaled seven of the team's 12 interceptions. The loss of Dwight Freeney might hinder the pass rush's potential but the team's additions of pass rusher Erik Walden, lineman Ricky Jean Francois, cornerback Greg Toler and safety LaRon Landry along with rookie pass rusher Bjoern Werner restock the roster with some hope for an improvement. They remain a longshot to help Fantasy owners as anything more than a one-week replacement option off waivers.

Dallas Cowboys

The Cowboys DST was among the most disappointing units in 2012. The Cowboys DST was drafted as a starting option last year but finished No. 27 in Fantasy points. They managed just seven interceptions, which was tied for lowest in the NFL, with only 34 sacks, nine fumbles and four defensive touchdowns. Rob Ryan was fired as defensive coordinator, and Monte Kiffin was brought in. The unit will switch from a 3-4 to a 4-3 scheme and run Kiffin's famous "Tampa 2" defense, but anything should be better than last year. We don't consider the Cowboys DST worth drafting in most formats, but they are a unit to watch. If Kiffin can turn this defense around quickly they could be worth adding off the waiver wire.

Miami Dolphins

The Dolphins DST has the ability to be a quality Fantasy unit in 2013, but it needs to generate more turnovers, and hopefully the addition of free agent Dannell Ellerbe will help. In 2012, the Dolphins were among the league leaders in sacks with 42. They were above average in run defense at No. 13 in yards allowed (1,734) but mediocre in pass defense at No. 27 (3,974 yards allowed). The problem, however, was turnovers. Miami had just 10 interceptions on the season and six fumble recoveries, which ranked in the bottom 10 in the NFL in both categories. If Miami can improve in that area then the Dolphins DST should rise. Go into this season with the unit as a No. 2 Fantasy option on Draft Day, and they can be a useful bye-week replacement if they start off the season playing at a high level.

Philadelphia Eagles

The Eagles DST can only improve this season since they were last in Fantasy points in 2012 with 96 in a standard league. The Eagles DST was the only team that failed to reach 100 points with just eight interceptions, 30 sacks, five fumble recoveries and one defensive touchdown. New defensive coordinator Billy Davis has his work cut out for him, but the Eagles still have plenty of talent to succeed with Trent Cole, DeMeco Ryans and Pat Chung leading the way. And the possible change from a 4-3 to a 3-4 scheme might help as well. Don't draft the Eagles DST in the majority of leagues, but keep an eye on their progress to start the season. If they get off to a good start then add them off the waiver wire.

Atlanta Falcons

The Falcons DST was a Top 10 Fantasy option in 2012, and they have the chance to be a starting option again this season. They have a revamped secondary, and they tried to upgrade their pass rush with the addition of ex-Giant defensive end Osi Umenyiora. There are stats you'd like to see the Falcons improve on -- scoring on special teams and getting more than two defensive touchdowns -- but they were among the leaders in interceptions (No. 6) with 20 and points allowed (No. 5) with 299. If they can create more sacks (just 29) and find the end zone a couple more times they could emerge as an elite option. Consider the Falcons a late-round flier if you miss on the top DST units or grab them as a bye-week replacement during the year.

New York Giants

The Giants DST will have to replace plenty of talent as Osi Umenyiora, Michael Boley and Chase Blackburn will play for new teams this season. But based on who's left, the Giants are pretty good. Jason Pierre-Paul, Justin Tuck and Mathias Kiwanuka will handle the pass rush, and Antrelle Rolle will lead the secondary. The Giants should be considered a low-end starting DST option, and hopefully they can rebound from a poor 2012 season when they had just 21 interceptions, 33 sacks and 14 fumble recoveries. Plan on drafting the Giants DST with a late-round pick in all leagues.

Jacksonville Jaguars

Gus Bradley's arrival in Jacksonville signals a change in coaching philosophies as the former Seahawks defensive boss will bring his attacking ways to Northeast Florida. Unfortunately, the talent he's inheriting in Jacksonville is among the league's worst. Last year the Jaguars had 20 sacks, 12 interceptions and zero touchdowns while ranking 30th against the run and 22nd against the pass while allowing 27.8 points per game. Though the Jaguars added talent for the secondary through the draft, the roster is little changed from last season. Bradley has his work cut out for him and it will probably take a year or two for this defense to improve. Don't make the Jaguars DST part of your Fantasy team.

New York Jets

When Rex Ryan took over as the head coach of the Jets they used to have a dominant defense. Not anymore. The Jets struggled in 2012 for the second year in a row, and the DST is no longer a viable option. Maybe that will change in 2013, but the Jets DST should be considered just a No. 2 Fantasy option in the majority of leagues, especially with Darrelle Revis now in Tampa Bay. Rookie Dee Milliner will try and replace Revis, but he has big shoes to fill. We would not draft the Jets DST in the majority of leagues.

Detroit Lions

A year ago the Lions DST appeared as one of the most promising options in Fantasy. Now, they'll give you a stomach ache. The unit totaled 34 sacks, 11 interceptions and zero touchdowns in 2012, producing 10 or more Fantasy points just four times. They were particularly mediocre vs. the run (1,889 yards and 13 touchdowns allowed) and the pass (3,569 yards, 26 touchdowns) but allowed on average 27.3 points per game and that helped lead to their downfall. They addressed the pass rush by selecting Ezekiel Ansah with their first-round pick and also picked up versatile lineman Jason Jones from the Titans. But until it's proven that those two additions will bring the heat, no one should count on the Lions DST in 2013 even with a fairly decent opening schedule (vs. the Vikings, at the Cardinals, at the Redskins).

Green Bay Packers

The Packers defense was flimsy in 2012, but their DST was fine for Fantasy for the second year in a row. Scoring only two touchdowns (Randall Cobb contributed another on a punt return), the Packers defense racked up a whopping 47 sacks, a huge turn around from last year. They faltered against the pass, getting just 18 interceptions after landing 31 of them in 2011 but did hold opponents to 218.3 pass yards per game. Steps in pass defense will only help the unit improve although the offense plays at such a pace that the defense can't help but yield passing yardage. The team cut Charles Woodson this offseason but added a nice group of rookies headlined by defensive end Datone Jones. With nice young talent in Clay Mathews, Morgan Burnett, Casey Hayward and B.J. Raji, they should remain potent. Even with a fairly tough schedule to begin the season and an early bye in Week 5, the Packers DST is worth a final round pick in drafts.

Bye 9Carolina Panthers

Carolina's defense is trending in the right direction after picking up 39 sacks and holding opponents to 3,568 passing yards and 1,761 rushing yards in 2012 (yes that's not bad). They could use an upgrade in the defensive secondary but got lucky in the NFL draft and picked up defensive tackles Star Lotulelei and Kawann Short with first- and second-round picks respectively. While the team is in a position to be a better defense, their division is loaded with high-powered offenses and their 2013 schedule includes games against powerhouses like New England, San Francisco and the N.Y. Giants. The Panthers aren't worth drafting but could be considered as a multi-week replacement option off waivers once the season gets going, particularly in Week 2 against the Bills and later on when they take on the Jets in Week 15.

Bye 4Bye 10*New England Patriots

The Patriots DST has the potential to be great in 2013, but they need to be more consistent. The Patriots DST had some big games in 2012 with at least 20 Fantasy points in a standard league in four games, but they also had single digits in five other outings. The good thing for the Patriots is they create plenty of turnovers with 20 interceptions and 21 fumble recoveries. This is now the third year in a row with at least 34 turnovers. A more consistent pass rush would help since they had just 36 sacks in 2012, which is the third year in a row they've been at 40 or fewer. But with Bill Belichick at the helm, the Patriots defense will always be among the best in the NFL. They are worth drafting as a Top 10 option in all leagues and should be taken with a late-round pick.

Bye 10Oakland Raiders

The Raiders DST has a lot of work to do before Fantasy owners can count on them. In 2012, the Raiders were among the worst DST options with just 117 Fantasy points in a standard league. They had only 11 interceptions, 25 sacks and nine fumble recoveries while allowing 443 points. In the past two years, the Raiders have allowed 876 points, which is ridiculously bad. Until things start to change on defense, you can't count on the Raiders DST as anything more than a bye-week replacement in the deepest of leagues. Based on the stats, it's easy to pass on the Raiders DST on Draft Day.

Bye 7St. Louis Rams

The Rams DST is hoping to build off its performance in 2012 when it was actually a top-10 Fantasy option. The reason was St. Louis' ability to rush the passer. The Rams tied Denver and Cincinnati for the most sacks in the NFL with 52. Leading the way were Chris Long (11.5 sacks) and Robert Quinn (10.5). Janoris Jenkins and Cortland Finnegan also combined for seven interceptions, with Jenkins returning three for touchdowns. The Rams also have a standout linebacker in James Laurinaitis, and this unit should continue to do well this season. They might not get drafted in the majority of leagues, but the Rams DST will be a great bye-week replacement during the season if they remain on your waiver wire following Draft Day.

DST (CONT.)

Baltimore Ravens

The turnover on the Ravens defense following the Super Bowl was alarming but the team did a very nice job picking up veteran and rookie talent to fix the holes. The most notable signing is linebacker Elvis Dumervil, who should replace Paul Kruger effectively as a pass rusher. Dumervil had his best career stats as a 3-4 outside linebacker with the Broncos. Michael Huff will replace Ed Reed and rookie Matt Elam will replace Bernard Pollard. Arthur Brown should begin his NFL career following in Ray Lewis' foot steps and Chris Canty and Marcus Spears add quality veteran depth to the Ravens' defensive line. Throw in Jacoby Jones returning kicks and punts and suddenly the Ravens DST is back on the map as a legit Fantasy option. It's worth one of your last two picks on Draft Day. Just be warned that they get off to a tough start at Denver in Week 1.

Washington Redskins

The Redskins DST has plenty of work to do this year after a disappointing campaign in 2012. The Redskins were among the NFL leaders with 21 interceptions, but they struggled to create sacks (32), fumbles (nine) or score touchdowns (four). Getting Brian Orakpo and Adam Carriker back from injury will definitely help the pass rush, and their presence alone could make the Redskins DST a sleeper. Keep an eye on the Redskins DST early in the season, and if they start out playing well consider adding them off the waiver wire.

New Orleans Saints

The Saints defense will undergo some significant changes in 2013 as it switches from a 4-3 front to a 3-4 scheme under the eye of new coordinator Rob Ryan. It can't get worse than what they've had of late. In 2012 the defense registered 30 sacks, 11 forced fumbles, 15 interceptions and a league-worst 440.1 total yards per game. One big issue is that switching schemes doesn't always work so well, and another is that coach Ryan has struggled in stops in Oakland, Cleveland and Dallas to build effective defenses. Though they added some promising players like Keenan Lewis, Victor Butler and rookies Kenny Vaccaro and John Jenkins, we wouldn't run the risk of drafting the Saints DST.

Seattle Seahawks

The Seahawks DST turned out to be among the best units in 2012, and they should continue to produce at a high level this season. The Seahawks were No. 3 in Fantasy points in standard leagues last year with 36 sacks, 13 fumble recoveries, 18 interceptions and six defensive touchdowns. They scored at least 16 Fantasy points seven times, including 45 points in Week 14 against the Cardinals. The Seahawks reached double digits in Fantasy points in all but four games, and they should be dominant again. We consider the Seahawks DST a No. 1 option in all leagues, and they are worth drafting with a late-round pick.

Bye 8

Pittsburgh Steelers

You might think the Steelers DST is old and weak and not what they used to be. Technically you'd be right as they finished with worse-than-expected stats in 2012. As the 12th-ranked DST, the unit had 37 sacks but just 10 interceptions with one total touchdown. So despite holding opponents to 19.6 points per game and ranking first against the pass and second against the run, they didn't deliver. Weird, right? The unit remains mostly unchanged save for rookie Jarvis Jones replacing James Harrison and Casey Hampton no longer on the roster. The Jones addition is promising but with five starters playing in their 10th year or more and depth an issue, this unit could make Fantasy owners feel some pain. The AFC North's offenses are getting better and the Steelers defense isn't turning over fast enough, so this might be the year to not overvalue the DST. If you don't get them with a final-round pick, don't shed tears -- it only means someone else reached for them.

Bye 5

Bye 5

Houston Texans

The Texans DST has become one of the top options in Fantasy, but they're not at the top like they were last season. True, the unit had 48 sacks with 16 interceptions, 17 forced fumbles (14 recovered) and five touchdowns, but they lost a couple of key starters in free agency (Glover Quin, Connor Barwin) and might have a hard time replacing them. Then again, they'll get Brian Cushing back from injury and if he's working alongside Brooks Reed, J.J. Watt and second-year man Whitney Mercilus then they'll have one of the most dangerous front sevens in the league. The Texans are still worth a late-round pick as a quality Fantasy option.

Bye 8

Bye 7

Tennessee Titans

The Titans DST isn't bad, though the stats might not support such a statement. Totaling 39 sacks and 19 interceptions, the squad totaled five defensive touchdowns and a nutty four scores on returns (three by Darius Reynaud). But it still wasn't enough for them to finish as a Top 12 option as they ranked 26th against the pass and 24th against the run. The numbers are surprising considering the overall types of talent they have in all three levels of the defense but the reality is they've struggled to stay disciplined and have found ways to give up gobs of yardage and points despite the perceived talent (a league-worst 29.4 points per game!). You might find yourself picking the Titans up off waivers as a one-week replacement option or if they can put up a strong start but don't draft them.

Bye 8

Bye 12

Minnesota Vikings

There's room for optimism when it comes to the Vikings DST. Rebounding from an awful 2011, the unit totaled five touchdowns - two on returns, three on defense - and 44 sacks but just 10 interceptions. They were ranked 11th vs. the run (105.8 yards per game allowed) and ninth against the pass (244.2 yards per game allowed). There's hope for the future after they replaced veteran cornerback Antoine Winfield with rookie Xavier Rhodes and added defensive tackle Sharrif Floyd to their line. Their schedule is tough but not as dangerous as others. For now they're among the DSTs you might consider with a final-round pick in drafts.
